Neighborhood Conference draws more than 700

By Mike Steely
steelym@knoxfocus.com

The recent Neighborhood Conference at the Knoxville Convention center drew more than 700 people including elected officials, city and county employees, neighborhood leaders, and interested people from throughout Knoxville and Knox County.

The 2015 Diana Conn Good Neighbor award was presented to Rita Schwartz, of Love Towers. She was chosen from among 14 other nominees, all of whom were nominated by their neighbors for exceptional contributions.

This year's conference, which focused on involving youth in neighborhoods, featured booths, breakout sessions and speakers from community groups. More than 35 non-profit organizations participated in the event in addition to, over 20 government agencies and six education groups. Seven corporations sponsored the conference. Groups present included AYSO Youth Soccer, Big Brothers and Big Sister of East Tennessee, Boys and Girls Clubs of the Tennessee Valley, Free Will Baptist Family Ministries, Knoxville Inner City Kids Outreach, K-Town Youth Empowerment Network, Our Daily Bread of Tennessee, The Joy of Music and Thrive Lonsdale.

Broadway, I-640 plans detailed

By Mike Steely
steelym@knoxfocus.com

The Tennessee Department of Transportation has big plans to rework an area of Broadway north of I-640 over the next couple of years and most Fountain City residents seem pleased. Most, but not all.

The homeowners along Greenway Drive and those streets between Greenway and I-640 are not pleased that the state will continue to prohibit left turns coming off of Greenway onto Broadway. It may be a safety issue but it's inconvenient for those residents.

Greenway Drive is a narrow road that stretches from Broadway to Washington Pike. The neighborhoods along the drive are hemmed in by a ridge to the north and I-640 and the railroad to the south.

Many Greenway Drive area residents attended the Fountain City Town Hall meeting held last Monday to voice their frustration. Several of the Greenway Drive residents and other attendees asked about an alternative route for their neighborhood to access south Broadway.

Carlene Malone of Fountain City Town Hall spoke up on behalf of the Greenway residents, saying they "have suffered greatly."

Mike Johnson, a Greenway area resident, said that there are no connecting streets and asked if there was a solution.

Michael W Russell, project manager with TDOT, told them that the "no left turn" and barrier there was a decision by the city and the state.

Tate's School Students Celebrate Music, Global Diversity

Students from Tate's School perform at "Tate's Touches the World" concert, accompanied by Cindy Kim, parent and professional flutist

By Sally Absher
sallyabsher@knoxfocus.com

March has been officially designated by the National Association for Music Education for the observance of Music in Our Schools Month, the time of the year when music education becomes the focus of schools across the nation.

Last Tuesday evening, over 165 preschool and elementary Tate's School students performed an international music program called "Tate's Touches the World," featuring songs in eight languages.

The program, based on the cultural heritage of the school's student body, was inspired by the school's founder Lou L. Tate. "After returning from a cultural exchange to Cuba, I wanted to explore the cultural diversity present at our school. So, we designed a cross-curricular study program to teach our students about different cultures and give them a more global perspective. I was pleased to discover we had 26 countries represented this year," said Lou L. Tate.

The program was the culmination of more than ten weeks of study for the students, involving every teacher at Tate's. Each age level researched the cultural and ethnic backgrounds of their classmates and studied the countries in an age appropriate way. For example, students in the third grade created posters for each country, fourth graders developed a travel brochure, and fifth grade students created a promotional iMovie based on their travel brochure.

"The study of global lifestyles, mortality rates, and literacy rates was a bit of an eye opener for the students. I think they have a new appreciation for all the opportunities that Americans take for granted," said Misty Anderson, technology instructor at Tate's.

Special guests and relatives from the 26 countries shared cultural knowledge in a variety of ways, including Indian dance lessons and authentic global foods. "By teaching the importance of understanding other cultures, students learn to communicate more effectively and appreciate their own unique role in America today," said Principal Kaye Simmons.

The musical production featured several guest performances, including Simmons, singing a solo during the finale of "America the Beautiful," and Mr. Joe Tate, husband of Lou L. Tate, playing the coronet during the finale. Simmons sang in the UT College Choir, and Mr. Tate is a former Principal at Cedar Bluff and Ball Camp Schools. He used to teach students instrumental music and is a strong supporter of music education.

Mrs. Cindy Kim, parent of Tate's students and a celebrated professional flutist, performed "Arirang," one of the oldest known folk songs from South Korea, and "Sakura," a Japanese song, with the students. "Music crosses all language barriers. I am fortunate to have my children at Tate's where they teach children to appreciate cultural diversity and the performing arts," Kim said.

Research studies have shown that music students achieve higher test scores and use both sides of their brains more frequently than non-music students. Beginning with transitional kindergarten, students at Tate's are taught to play instruments, read music and to understand phrasing, rhythm, harmony and tempo.

Judy Wilson, Music Director at Tate's School for the past 26 years, adds "Music is an integral part of how we challenge each student. I couldn't be more proud of our students singing the eight languages represented here tonight."

At the close of the program, fifth grade student Kristin Menna read the Statue of Liberty Poem. It is especially poignant to Kristin's family because her great-grandfather, an engineer, immigrated to America through Ellis Island and was instrumental in the placement of the Statue of Liberty.

City to take up Sign Ordinance again

By Mike Steely
steelym@knoxfocus.com

The City Council meets Tuesday evening and will, once more, take up the adoption of a many-page sign ordinance in an attempt to regulate the height and placement of signs. The proposed ordinance would lower the height of signs, regulate new and non-complying signs, and the changes may be opposed by organizations like Scenic Knoxville.

Opponents of the changes in the current sign ordinances, which are scattered throughout various city codes, contend the new changes are "business friendly."

The city council will also vote on passing, on final reading, changes in the city employee pension system.

Resolutions on the agenda to be discussed include spending $205,300 on sidewalks for Old Broadway, increasing an agreement with Vaughn & Melton Consulting Engineers by $23,000 for the Gay Street Streetscape Project, and increasing the amount with the same company for $135,460 for the Jackson

Bits of News About Local Education

Year Round School. The school-wide meetings are underway regarding a proposed Year Round (or "Balanced") Calendar. The list of meetings can be found here: <http://www.knoxschools.org/domain/4273>. Note that many of the meetings are already over, and participants are being told that this is their "only chance" to weigh in on the idea.

The meetings follow the same Delphi Technique of "dialogue to consensus" used to sell the 10-Year Plan and the KCS Strategic Plan. A facilitator presents an overview of the topic, and then the attendees are divided into small groups to "dialogue" on the pros and cons of various ideas. The facilitators in each group "guide" the discussion, hoping to arrive at the predetermined outcome. The individual groups "vote." And people leave, thinking they have contributed to the process.

According to several in attendance in the Halls area last week (which took place on the same date as the middle school/high school band concert), they were asked to vote for the current calendar, a 9/2 calendar, or a 9/3 calendar. The results in one group were: nine for current, three for 9/2, zero for 9/3, and in another group: five for current, three for 9/2 and zero for 9/3. So that is what 20 of the 400,000 people in Knox County thought about the options. Hopefully many more people will weigh in.

The biggest concern voiced is why this is even being discussed now. KCS has offered NO information on the cost, NO information on what, if any "intervention" will be offered, and for whom, and NO peer reviewed research that clearly shows a benefit for the majority of students under year round school.

Most people agree that they'd like to see the return of the week-long Fall Break. Beyond that ... it depends. But don't be complacent. The Superintendent hopes to bring this to vote as early as May or June of this year. And his loyal supporters, both principals and certain BOE members, are doing all they can to grease the skids for an easy passage. Don't let this be another vote under the guise of "if we pass it they will fund it."

And funding will be a HUGE issue. Metro Nashville tried for several years to pass a 9/2 calendar. They finally compromised on a modified 9/2 calendar, with a one week fall break and two weeks for Christmas and spring. Giving up that one extra week of break in the fall saved MNPS $20M.

Karen Carson - Blaming Teachers for Year Round School? Last week, Fifth District BOE member Karen Carson had a busy Sunday. First she appeared on WATE's "Tennessee This Week", and then was in-studio on the George Korda "State Your Case" radio show, along with Assistant Superintendent Dr. Elizabeth Alvez, to promote McIntyre's proposed year round calendar.

First Carson said, "I don't have a position on it yet... I want to be compelled to make that move." But later she said, "I think the four factors that I look at are all going to interplay. For me, if a majority of teachers say they don't want it, that's going to influence me greatly...but if a majority - 70 + percent of teachers say this is a good thing for kids and for teachers, and it's revenue neutral, or revenue doable, and the academic research shows it's a plus, and 48% of the parents say its good - so 52% say no - I would probably go with it."

Carson appears to be triangulating this issue so she can say she "did it for the teachers." If a plan passes that is not popular with parents, it sets the teachers up as the scapegoat. The opinions of teachers are extremely important. But so are the opinions of parents, taxpayers, and greater community. We will all be impacted to one degree or another.

Dr. Alvez admitted that the "research is somewhat mixed in terms of academic improvement." When asked about cost, she answered, "It depends on the implementation." Ah yes. The devil is in the details.

It also depends how the questions are asked. Maryville is usually cited as a District where "everyone" loves year round school. But a caller from

Focus on the Law

Powdered Alcohol

By Sharon Frankenberg, Attorney at Law

On March 10, 2015 the federal Alcohol and Tobacco Tax and Trade Bureau of the United States Department of the Treasury approved the sale of a powdered alcohol product called Palcohol. Palcohol had previously been approved for U.S. sale by the Food and Drug Administration. According to the Palcohol website www.palcohol.com, the product is not actually being produced yet but it is expected to hit the market this summer. It is a powdered version of vodka, rum and three cocktails sold in one ounce packets. Just add six ounces of water to make the equivalent of one shot of liquid alcohol. That does not sound very controversial but the concept has been met with criticism and multiple states acting to ban its sale within their borders.

The inventor of Palcohol, Mark Phillips, claims a desire to have a convenient "refreshing adult beverage" after hours of activity (hiking, biking, etc.) motivated him to create the product. No need to lug heavy bottles of wine or beer, all you would need to carry is a light packet of powder and some water. This convenience is perhaps what might make it so appealing for underaged consumers. Concerns over abuse of the powdered alcohol products by underaged children has led many states to anticipate that school children will get hold of the powder and pour it into water bottles and drink it and everyone will think they are drinking water. Of course, smuggling of liquid alcohol by children into schools already occurs with regularity and it is not yet known if this product will make that problem worse.

Other concerns include the ingestion of the new powdered alcohol products by snorting. The Palcohol website asserts that "even the goofballs won't snort Palcohol due to the pain the alcohol would cause. It really burns." While that may be true, one only needs to go online to see how many "goofballs" are willing to take liquid alcohol through every bodily orifice despite the pain. There can be no doubt that alcohol is being abused in liquid form. The interesting twist is that while you might assume that this powdered alcohol would be sold at the same retail outlets and under the same restrictions as liquid alcohol, what if your state regulatory statutes define "alcohol" only in liquid terms? In Tennessee the phrase "alcoholic beverage" means and includes alcohol, spirits, liquor, wine, high alcohol content beer, and every liquid containing alcohol, spirits, wine, and high alcohol content beer and capable of being consumed by a human being." Tenn. Code Annotated Section 57-3-101.

In reaction to the concerns over this new form of alcohol, the Tennessee Senate voted on March 12, 2015 to ban the sale of crystalline or powdered alcohol. The bill was sponsored by Sen. Bill Ketron, R-Murfreesboro, who often handles alcohol related legislation including the wine-in-supermarkets law. The vote was 31 to 1 without debate and Sen. Brain Kelsey, R-Germantown cast the lone vote against the bill.

This week a House subcommittee will now consider a version of this bill that is sponsored by Sheila Butt, R-Columbia. If this law is passed, the sale of crystalline or powdered alcohol will be a misdemeanor.

was assisted by almost 100 volunteers. Debbie Sharp, assistant director, said that of the 735 lunches prepared only 25 were left over. All day long people were coming and going, visiting the exhibits, chatting with officials, and attending or presenting workshops. The conference started at 7:30 and lasted until 3:30 at the Knoxville Convention Center. This was the largest Neighborhood Conference so far.

"We'll not mention the glitches along the way," Director David Massey joked during Wednesday's Neighborhood Advisory Board meeting. The busy board only spent a few minutes reviewing the event. Massey said the next conference is in 2017 for the city and county and next year the city holds a smaller conference just for city neighborhoods.

When Massey began the board meeting the members rose and applauded him and the Knoxville's Office of Neighborhoods staff for work in planning and holding the event.

"How do you go about capturing that kind of energy again?" Massey asked, thanking those members of the board who helped, attended, and promoted the conference.

"It was really inspiring. You all worked and it was amazing," Sharp said.

A map detailing the planned changes to the I-640 Interchange at North Broadway.

Broadway, I-640 plans detailed

Russell used project maps and a video of simulated traffic flow to help illustrate the changes that will be happening. The plan includes reworking Old Broadway and four lanes on part of southbound Broadway, placing a much longer exit ramp onto eastbound I-640, and a new ramp from

I-640 onto northbound Broadway.

Expanding the ramps will necessitate the removal of some commercial buildings between Greenway Drive and the interstate. The TDOT plans also show improvements on Old Broadway as it connects with I-640 and moving Addison Street off Greenway Drive a bit east to make room for the entry loop proposed for northbound Broadway traffic to enter the interstate bypass and rerouting the eastern end of Dutch Valley Road where it connects with Old Broadway.

The state is finalizing right of way purchases now and construction, once it starts, is estimated to take 24 months or longer, with traffic maintained along Broadway during the rebuild.

Kathy Jennings-Johnson said neighborhood residents concerned about the plans and the continuing "no left turn" policy at Greenway and Broadway should organize to change the plans.

Why the Education Establishment Hates Vouchers

By Steve Hunley,
Publisher
publisher@knoxfocus.com

The Tennessee School Board Association is busy pedaling an editorial written by the Executive Director of the TSBA for publication all across the state. The education bureaucrats are panicking, as it appears the Tennessee General Assembly will finally pass a school voucher bill.

Dr. Tammy Grissom, Executive Director of the TSBA, tries to cite reasons why folks should be against school vouchers. She claims, "Vouchers use your money to help pay for a student to go to a private school that answers to private administrators and not you the taxpayer. Public schools must answer to the people and are held accountable for the use of local, state and federal educational tax money."

If only that were true! Appointed superintendents answer only to their own Boards. Do you think Jim McIntyre answers to the taxpayers? Do you suppose Jim McIntyre considers the taxpayers except for whenever he's asking for more and more of your tax dollars to spend? Do you imagine there is an outcry on the part of the public for a balanced calendar, which is McIntyre-speak for Year Round School? No, the outcry is confined to Jim McIntyre's office. Was it the taxpayers Jim McIntyre was thinking of when he insisted the Board of Education extend his contract to the maximum four years under the law when it still had years to run? And did the Board consider the taxpayers or the public when they did exactly what he demanded? NO.

The notion public schools are accountable to taxpayers is just not true. In Knox County it's gotten some better on the board, but there was a time when McIntyre lorded over it with an 8 - 1 majority. The Board was far more responsive to McIntyre than it ever was to the people. Folks in Knox County began to catch on and the last election helped to change that.

Dr. Grissom states, "Private schools are not public institutions, and without proper oversight the 'qualifications and standards' for students may fall short of expectations and undermine the fundamental idea of equality in education. Vouchers require the public to supplement these standards even if they are contrary to state and federal education law."

Education law, pretty much exclusively laid down by the state and federal governments, is likely one big reason public education has declined to its current state.

Taxpayers supplement all sorts of things - - people who don't work, pop out babies we have to support, free health care, tax rebates for people who pay not a dime in taxes and the list goes on. Why is it that most people with the means send their kids to private schools chose to do so? The answer is simple: because they emerge better educated with a brighter future.

Dr. Grissom warns us that, "Vouchers force the public to support two drastically different educational systems one over which the public has no oversight." I would argue that parents would have more oversight if they had more control over their child's education, which would be the case with vouchers.

The system over which the public supposedly has oversight spends literally billions of tax dollars and yet in Tennessee seventy percent of the kids graduating high school have to take remedial courses before they go to college, IF they get to college.

The education bureaucrats and self-appointed do-gooders are willing to keep everybody locked into a deteriorating public school system in the name of equality. They complain that private schools can "cherry pick" the good students, those who behave properly, and want to learn. So what?

There's no business in the world that would still be in business with the record the public school system has presently. What the education bureaucrats fail to see is that nothing in this country needs to be reformed more than public schools. Most education bureaucrats are dead set against anything except continuing the monopoly they've enjoyed forever. When did you ever get the best price or product as the result of a monopoly?

Never. You never will.

Just about everything in this country became better when it faced competition. Rather than continuing to have a monopoly on tax dollars and our kids, perhaps a little competition will force the education bureaucrats to clean up their act and actually focus on educating our children.

The folks in charge of public education have largely managed to avoid any real oversight; the legislature, in its wisdom, has come up with new rules and regulations that are supposed to hold teachers accountable. Much of their reforms are, in my opinion, questionable. Yet they didn't do a thing to hold the highly paid education bureaucrats accountable at all.

Jim McIntyre is a perfect example of the new public school education bureaucrat; he's really quite good at employing the education-speak favored by the bureaucracy. McIntyre has better dexterity than anybody who has ever been on "Dancing With the Stars" in side-stepping hard questions he doesn't want to answer. Lastly, he has few peers in wanting more and more money and wasting it.

McIntyre's "vision" amounts to mouthing platitudes, employing feel good phrases such as his constant refrain "there's some extraordinary learning" going on in our schools. Yet seventy percent of our students in Tennessee, and it's even higher in Knox County, require remedial courses when going to college.

They incessantly tell us they can do so much more, if only they had more money, because they've done so well after spending half a billion dollars annually (sarcasm alert). Just where is all that oversight Dr. Grissom is talking about?

For that matter, the education folks are decrying the "special interests" and lobbyists pushing the voucher bill. To the education establishment, would this include the delegation of black ministers from Memphis that recently traveled to Nashville at their own expense to encourage the legislature to support vouchers? The fact is education bureaucrats are a special interest if there ever was one. For years, that special interest has been successful in preserving its own domain. The education establishment has been of, by and for the establishment when it should be of, by and for the children.

Also it's time average folks had more skin in the game. Simply leaving everything to the education bureaucrats hasn't worked that well. Graduation rates, test scores, and all the other data doesn't mean a thing ultimately; the ultimate test of public schools is have you prepared the students to go out and get a job or further their own educations. That's the ONLY data that matters. Everything else is meaningless when push comes to shove.

Your education bureaucrats have had your chance and you failed. It would be hard for somebody to do a worse job.

We have nothing to lose and everything to gain by passing the voucher bill and I encourage the legislature to do just that.

Legislative Update on Education Bills

With the 109th General Assembly well underway, there is good, bad, and ugly with regard to education bills.

First the good: HB0036 (Dunn)/SB0285 (Briggs) removes the requirement that the local education authority (LEA) must include student scores in a TCAP subject area as part of the student's grade in that subject. This bill passed out of the Education instruction and Programs subcommittee last week. HB0983 (Hill)/SB0671 (Nicely) prohibits standardized tests for K-2. This bill was rolled to March 25.

On the bad and ugly list, some of the most controversial bills under consideration are HB1049 (Dunn)/SB0999 (Gardenhire), and HB0210 (Brooks)/SB0122 (Kelsey), which would enact the "Tennessee Choice and Opportunity Scholarship Act" (Vouchers). Dunn's bill was rolled to tomorrow (3/17); the senate versions of both bills have been referred to the senate finance committee.

It's bad enough to be a follower, and not a leader. But why, when it comes to education, is Tennessee continuing to follow Louisiana - one of the worst examples in the country? We're even copying the names of their lackluster reforms.

Vouchers, under Louisiana's "Opportunity Scholarship Program" (sound familiar?) were piloted in New Orleans in 2008 and offered statewide in 2012-2013. Mercedes Schneider, Louisiana native, education researcher, and author, wrote about Louisiana's voucher program on her blog (deutsch29.wordpress.com).

Louisiana's opportunity scholarship program has had a history of problems, from lack of adequate due diligence in accepting schools into the voucher program to funding and performance issues.

Louisiana's Minimum Foundation Program (MFP) money earmarked for public schools was used to pay private schools to educate voucher students (which "choked" public schools by diverting funding). But rather than directly funding vouchers, the Louisiana State Superintendent John White tried to convince state school board to "launder" the MFP money by first accepting it and then turning it over to voucher schools.

The School board refused, and the Louisiana Supreme Court ruled in 2013 that MFP money could not be used to fund the voucher program. So the following year, White and Governor Jindal had to fund 8,000 vouchers via a line item in the Louisiana state budget. Take note, Tennessee.

Public interest in utilizing Louisiana's Opportunity Scholarships just wasn't there. By the fall of 2013, less than 14,000 of the 380,000 eligible students applied for vouchers, and 9,100 seats were presumably filled. In reality, only 7,400 used their vouchers.

More importantly, there is the issue of not enough private schools from which to "choose." The private schools are the only entity with "choice" in this matter. Schneider says, "It seems that established private schools for the most part are "choosing" to not allow public school students, with their public school money and the state-connected, White-puppeted strings that come along, to enter their halls."

And, with the lack of due diligence in the beginning, many schools that were accepted into the voucher program in 2012-2013 did not continue into 2013-14 because they had "failed." In 2013, only 40 percent of grades 3 through 8 voucher students scored at or above the average on the statewide assessment, compared to a state average of 69 percent. By 2014, the percentage did rise to 45 for voucher students, still well below the 69 percent state average.

Louisiana is not alone. Similar lackluster results in both achievement and failure to narrow the achievement gap have been reported from the 13 states (and D.C.) with state voucher programs. In 2011, the Center on Education Policy (CEP) published a report entitled "Keeping informed about School Vouchers: A Review of Major Developments and Research." The report concludes that in spite of much of the recent voucher research having been conducted or sponsored by pro-voucher organizations, "vouchers have had no clear positive effect on student academic achievement, and mixed outcomes for students overall."

It is an "inconvenient truth" that taxpayers across the US will soon be spending $1 Billion a year to help families pay private school tuition, and there is little evidence that the investment yields academic gains. (Politico 10/6/13).

Even if one accepts the false myth of "failing schools," when the problem is generational poverty and societal norms that have destroyed the family and communities, here are a few more inconvenient truths about vouchers, thanks to Tennessee Reclaiming Educational Excellence (TREE):

- Voucher schools are not required to have the same academic standards as public schools, or abide by open records laws, eliminating accountability for tax dollars.

- Many kids in poverty still won't be able to participate, as only tuition is paid - not transportation, uniforms, textbooks, or required reading.

- Voucher schools aren't required to accept special needs, English language learners, and other vulnerable students.

- Schools can close or withdraw from the program on a whim, breeding instability among our students.

Districts in Tennessee need to keep what public tax dollars they have in the public schools. Everyone complains that Tennessee schools are near the bottom in per-student funding. Why would you further dilute those limited resources by redistributing them to private schools?

It is embarrassing that both voucher bills are sponsored by members of the Knox County delegation in Nashville, and yet, just two weeks ago the Knox County School Board passed a nearly unanimous resolution (only Doug Harris voted no) in opposition to vouchers.

An All Too Familiar Story, Part One

My name is Jacqueline Sims, M.Ed. Although this is my story; it is unfortunately all too familiar.

In August 2013 I accepted a teaching position in a Knox County inner city school as a 5th grade teacher. I loved my job. Each day I arrived at school at 6:45 a.m. and left daily after 8:00 p.m. and on the weekends I spent an average of 8-10 hours preparing lessons.

As a new teacher I expected that I would be provided with support systems and be required to attend new teacher orientation and monthly new teacher meetings. I was not.

I had very few behavior problems resulting in office referrals because early in the school year I established a sense of community with the students in my classroom. Each student's voice was heard and students felt valued and appreciated. I tried to make teachable moments out of difficult situations and as a result, my students: learned to collaborate, became empathetic, practiced tolerance and acceptance of each other's differences, and we became like a family.

The four administrators at my school rarely visited my classroom. In fact, between August 13 and September 30, each assistant principal conducted one walk through observation.

My only semi-evaluation transpired on September 3, when our head principal observed my classroom for about 20 minutes. Since I had no feedback resulting from his visit or from the walk-through visits by the assistant principals, I assumed that all was well in my classroom.

My first official evaluation took place on October 16 during whole group reading. The night before my announced evaluation, I received an email from my principal informing me that he would like to meet with me during my planning block immediately before my evaluation. This meeting he called a "record of conference."

He informed me that this meeting was a follow up of his classroom observation six weeks prior. He said that he wanted to see improvements in my classroom management and student behavior. This stunned me because he only observed my classroom one time six weeks before this meeting and my students were the best-behaved class in the school. In fact my students were so well behaved that each of the encore teachers requested to have their announced evaluations with my class. I did not see that his concerns were justifiable, however, I did not protest. I was upset that he chose to have this conference immediately before my first evaluation. I left the meeting shaken and discouraged.

As a result of the ill-timed meeting with the principal, my first evaluation reflected my nervous demeanor even though I had spent hours getting together materials, creating a PowerPoint, and rehearsing my lessons. My former confidence in my teaching was replaced with fear and anxiety resulting from the meeting. At the close of my evaluation, I asked the students to read silently before transitioning to small group reading. I used this time to mentally and physically prepare the materials for small groups. Normally I would have used my plan time to prepare for small groups however I was meeting with my principal. The evaluators, a Master Teacher and an assistant principal, left my room and I breathed a sigh of relief.

The week after my evaluation, this same assistant principal came back into my room to observe during small group reading time. I was surprised but I carried on my lesson. Later that same afternoon, I received an email from the assistant principal asking me to meet with her so she could "debrief me on her visit to my room."

She told me she was concerned because at the end of my evaluation I asked my students to read silently before transitioning from whole group to small group. I explained to her why I had the students read silently for five minutes. She also said that she did not think my small reading group activities were rigorous enough. I explained that each reading group had differentiated activities and that she observed my lowest reading group which was reading on a third grade reading level. I explained that the activities were differentiated by the skills and ability levels of the students.

I was very concerned about all that was happening. I confided in another assistant principal and told him that I felt like the victim of a witch hunt. I asked for his advice and he advised me not to do or say anything so as not to be labeled non-compliant. I did as advised.

None of the four administrators visited my classroom again until November 27, 2013 and then subsequently in February 2014.

I strived to provide the best education for my students so I spent even more hours researching and preparing creative, challenging lessons. In January 2014, a KCS administrator from the downtown office and my principal visited my class during my reading block. The two observed as I asked my students higher-order questions. The administrator praised my high level questioning during a grade level meeting and this was later reaffirmed by the head principal. It seemed the tables had finally turned, but my joy was short lived.

John Cullum to be honored

John Cullum

By Mike Steely
steelym@knoxfocus.com

You know his face. You've seen him in movies like "Marie" and the 1999 version of "Inherit The Wind." You've seen him on television, often, and most likely in "Mad Men" or as Dr. Greene's father in "ER."

John Cullum can boast a long and remarkable career on stage, film and television. The graduate of the old Knoxville High School and the University of Tennessee will be awarded the Clarence Brown Theatre's Artistic Excellence Award during the theatre's Annual Gala on June 7. The event will be held at the RT Lodge at 1406 Wilkinson Pike in Maryville beginning at 6:30 p.m.

Cullum was born in Knoxville in 1930. He was a team member in 1950 of UT's Championship Tennis Team and starred in his youth as John Sevier in a Gatlinburg outdoor drama.

He made his Broadway stage debut in 1960. Viewers who have only seen him acting on television are often surprised to learn that he also sings. In 1966 Cullum starred on Broadway in where he sang "On a Clear Day You Can See Forever" and was selected, that year, as best actor in a musical. One of Knoxville High School's many famous graduates, which also includes James Agee, Clarence Brown, Mary Costa, Patricia Neal and former Knoxville Mayor Kyle Tester, Cullum was inducted to the Theatre Hall of Fame and was voted best actor in a musical Broadway show. He won two Tony Awards and last year appeared in the Broadway hit "Casa Valentina."

He's married, in 1959, Emily Frankel, a noted writer and dancer. His son, JD Cullum, is also an actor.

Standardized Documentary. BOE members Gloria Deatheridge and Karen Carson may not have heard about the growing resistance to high stakes standardized testing and National Opt Out Movement, but they are quickly becoming a minority. On March 7, SPEAK sponsored a showing of the documentary film "Standardized: Lies, Money, and Civil Rights. How Testing is Ruining Public Education."

Approximately 60 interested parents, teachers, and community members filled the meeting room at the Bearden public library Saturday afternoon. Many stayed to participate in a round-table discussion following the movie. Learn more about the National Opt Out Movement in next week's Focus.

KCS 2015-2016 Budget Preview. Last week's mid-month marathon BOE meeting lasted over five and a half hours, and included a presentation on the Middle School Study; a discussion of the preliminary FY 2016 Capital Improvement Plan, and a preview of the preliminary FY 2016 General Purpose Budget.

The budget calls for a nearly $16M increase in funding over the 2014-2015 budget, which Dr. McIntyre said represents a 3.7% increase. Because KCS has relied heavily in recent years on grants and other funding sources that are ending, the preliminary budget includes a number of curtailments, cuts, and yet-to-be-determined reductions.

We are sure there will be a "robust" discussion of various options in the months to come. At the top of the list, of course, is Doug Harris' perpetual solution of a tax increase to give the schools $40 - 60 more in funding (so he can give it away to charter schools and private schools via vouchers?)

Looking for James Agee and Alex Haley

By Mike Steely
 steelym@knoxfocus.com

Ever been surprised by something you didn't expect but it made you happy to find it?

So, I'm watching one of my favorite movies, "The African Queen," and at the end I watched the credits and saw that Knoxville's James Agee wrote the screenplay.

I thought, "Wow, I didn't know that." I knew Agee wound up in Hollywood and wrote for the movie studios, but that one caught me by surprise. When I Googled "Agee" I also discovered that he wrote "Night of the Hunter," one of the scariest movies I have ever seen.

Although Agee died in New York City in 1955 and is buried on the Agee family farm in Hillsdale, New York, there just might be places in Knoxville that still recall the noted writer.

I remember that his relatives had lived in Lafollette and I've read a bit of his novels but I'm not that familiar with his life in Knoxville.

I found out that Knoxville has a James Agee Street and a James Agee Park along that route in Fort Sanders, near his childhood home on Highland Avenue and 15th Street. Agee drew from that childhood to write "A Death in the Family" and mentions various places including the Deaf School, which became the City Hall before the City-County Building was constructed.

After his father died when Agee was six years old, his mother remarried and Agee's life changed a lot. Agee attended the Old Knoxville High School briefly, from 1924 to 1925. He was admitted to Harvard University in 1932 and after graduation wrote for several national magazines. During the depression he continued to write and lived with sharecroppers in Alabama where he wrote "Let Us Now Praise Famous Men."

By the 1950s he was in California writing movie scripts. He was married several times and had several children.

"A Death in the Family" received the 1958 Pulitzer Prize, three years after his death.

Haley's Glasses

The oversized statue of author Alex Haley sits just off of Dandridge Avenue and overlooks Morningside Park. The statue recalls when the author of "Roots" made his home in Knoxville.

Cast in bronze, the 12-foot statue was created by sculptress Tina Allen and dedicated in 1998 during Black History Month. The little park that the statue sits in has a playground, a water fountain and green space.

What the park, or the statue, doesn't have now is Haley's glasses. The bronze glasses were taken last fall and no one has returned them.

"We are working with Preston Farebow to re-create the glasses. We are trying to create them in such a way that they will be more resistant to vandalism," Joe Walsh, Director of Parks and Recreation told the Focus.

"We have been in contact with the sculpture house where Tina Allen worked. We hope to get this done by May," he said.

son of a World War I veteran was raised by his grandparents in Henning, Tennessee. He graduated high school early and entered college, but quit at 17 years old to join the U.S. Coast Guard.

Starting as a mess cook Haley wrote stories and became a journalist, retiring from the military in 1959.

In his later years he moved to Knoxville, bought a home near Clinton, and spent much time in our city.

Haley died in Seattle, Washington in 1992 and is buried beside his childhood home in Henning, Tennessee.

No Sidewalks Needed in Massey Creek Subdivision

By Mike Steely
steelym@knoxfocus.com

Although the Metropolitan Planning Commission's staff recommended that sidewalks be included in concept plans for a 92-house development on Hardin Valley Road, the MPC members split on the matter and voted 8-7 to allow the plans to leave out sidewalks.

David Harbin, the project engineer, told the commission the development will include a common area, community center, pools, a walking trail, and an easement for a future greenway.

Staff Principal Planner Tom Brechko said suggested that sidewalks be included from the proposed homes to the amenities. Commissioner Herb Anders said that sidewalks need to be included along the long streets and Chairperson Rebecca Longmire voiced concern about the 52 children estimated for the completed development walking to catch the school bus there.

Commissioner Michael Kane said sidewalks need to be a standard and asked, "Why can't we change the regulations to include sidewalks?" Interim MPC Director Jeff Welch said requiring sidewalks in a development has been discussed for years and subdivision regulations are currently being revised.

Commissioner Art Clancy said the body should make it easy for them to do a development and Commissioner Bart Carey asked if a sidewalk could be put in on a 15% slope there.

The split vote passed the subdivision with no sidewalks required and afterward Anders asked the developer to consider preparing the main street for a future sidewalk.

The MPC also voted to approve an update to the city's One Year Plan and ask the city council to approve it also. The commission approved a use-on-review for Lyons Crossing concept on Northshore and Knightsbridge and a final subdivision plat for The Glen at Hardin Valley, Phase I, and voted to up the number of units per acre for EJM Properties on Dogwood road near Solway.

From State Representative Harry Brooks

It has been a busy week in Nashville. The office was closed on March 5th due to bad weather and road conditions. I am hoping that will be the last of the bad weather. Session is in full swing and people are beginning to speculate our end date. I believe it will either be April 17th or April 23rd unless there are unforeseen changes.

I am very pleased to report that three graduate programs at the University of Tennessee have been ranked in the top ten for their programs at public universities. The three top ten programs are nuclear engineering, supply chain management, and clinical law training. These rankings were reported by U.S. News and World Report graduate rankings. It is great to see the University of Tennessee being recognized for its outstanding academic programs.

An interesting bill that has come through the House Education Administration and Planning Committee it would amend the Little Hatch Act to include teachers, principals, and school personnel. The Little Hatch Act prohibits government employments from partaking in political activity, like campaigning, while on duty.

There is a lot of discussion concerning the transportation budget due to all the potholes caused by the ice; there is already a lot of money being spent on road maintenance this year. The question is how do we move forward in revenue for expanding expenditures. The miles of roads and the number of bridges we maintain every year is growing while the revenue has stayed constant for the last few years. One problem being discussed is that electric cars do not buy gas and the gas tax is how we create revenue for the roads. Therefore, electric cars do not contribute to the maintenance of roads even though they contribute to wearing them down. The same issue is true for trailers hitched to the back of cars.

So far in this Legislative Session both the House and the Senate have filed 1386 bills. For a bill to be heard the sponsor must to put it in notice for a committee; the week of March 16th is the deadline for many of the committees in the House for their bills to be put on notice. I have quite a few bills that have been placed on calendar the week of March 16th for the House floor, the House Finance Ways and Means Sub Committee, and the House Education Programs Sub Committee. House Bill 0006, placed on the House floor calendar, would require the fiscal capacity for each LEA used to allocate Basic Education Program (BEP) funding be determined by May 1st preceding the school year. This bill addresses the concerns the county commission and school board had about the budget and the changes in revenue estimation from May to June. House Bill 0420, placed on the House floor calendar, removes obsolete and contradictory language concerning temporary superintendents of schools.

House Bill 0127, placed on the House Finance Ways and Means Sub Committee calendar, would enact the "State Authorization Reciprocity Agreement Act" which would reduce the cost of private post-secondary and public post-secondary institutions when they enroll students that live outside the state of Tennessee as in virtual education. House Bill 0398, placed on the House Finance Ways and Means Sub Committee calendar, extends the sunset date of the Virtual Public Schools Act to 2019. House Bill 0819, placed on the House Finance Ways and Means Sub Committee calendar, would revised the requirement that the state board has to meet ever quarter in Nashville to instead require that the state board meet ever quarter, with at least two meetings held in Nashville. House Bill 0945, placed on the House Finance Ways and Means Sub Committee calendar, would allow recipients of the HiSET high school equivalency credential to be eligible for a TN HOPE scholarship. House Bill 0946, placed on the House Finance Ways and Means Sub Committee calendar, would require the Tennessee STEM innovation network to establish STEM innovation hubs in rural areas of the state; it would also require Tennessee STEM innovation network to provide a middle school curriculum on the variety and benefits of STEM careers.

House Bill 0947, placed on the House Education Instructions and Programs Sub Committee calendar, would increase charter school application fees, institute authorizer fees, require the department of education to verify that LEAs are providing the amount of funding to charter schools required by laws, and alters LEAs responsibilities in providing facilities for charter school use.

I look forward to continuing my service as your Representative. I will be in Nashville on a regular basis Monday - Thursdays until session ends. Please let me know if I, or my office, can be of service to you. I can be reached at my Nashville office at 615-741-6879 or rep.harry.brooks@capitol.tn.gov. If you would like to subscribe to my weekly email updates about the happenings here at the Legislature go to <http://www.capitol.tn.gov/lyris/h19s.html> to sign up. It is an honor to be your representative.

A County-wide Fire Department?

By Mike Steely
steelym@knoxfocus.com

Should Knox County consider establishing a county-wide fire department? Are the volunteer and contracted fire service companies adequate? Should the county only get involved in assisting in funding of local fire units or the construction of fire halls?

These are just some of the questions that may be discussed on Monday, March 30th at 3 p.m. as members of the Fire Protection Workgroup meet in the main assembly room at the City-County Building. Commissioner Dave Wright announced the meeting recently and members of the committee include Commissioners Charles Busler and Ed Thomas plus members of the three county fire departments and county officials. Members include Jerry Harnish, John Linsenbiger, John Whited, Daniel Sanders, Kevin Lauer, Kathy Saunders, Mark Morris, Darron Long and Hugh Holt.

The county commission recently approved an in lieu of taxes for a developer to construct a new fire station for the Chota community to bewhich will be operated by Rural/Metro. Authorizing athis tax break for a Chota-area fire hall has prompted some discussion about fire coverage in north and south Knox County.

Currently there are only four fire organizations stations outside of Knoxville in Knox County: Seymour Volunteer Fire Department, Karns Volunteer Fire Department, Heiskell Volunteer Fire Department and Rural/Metro. Rural/Metro recently separated its ambulance and fire components.

Jerry Harnish leads the Rural/Metro as Fire Chief, assisted by Gene Blaylock as deputy chief of operations.

Erin Downey is the new Regional Director of Ambulance Service. The company has 15 fire stations in Knox County.

Authorizing a tax break for a Chota-area fire hall has prompted some discussion about fire coverage in north and south Knox County. Rural/Metro is the exclusive operator of 991 ambulance service since July, 2013, in Knox County. The company is the largest in the nation for subscription based fire protection.

One of the questions for any future county fire system is the availability of water lines and, of course, fire hydrants. Currently there are at least seven utilities companies serving the area: Knoxville Utility Board, Northeast Utility, Knox-Chapman Utility District, First Utility District, Lenoir City Utility Board, Hallsdale-Powell Utility District and Luttrell-Blaine-Corryton Utility District.

Commissioner Wright told The Focus, "The goals, yet to be set, will be to discuss wither whether or not Knox County desires to be more involved in fire protection. It's a work in progress."

On the workgroup agenda is a discussion about the Tennessee Open Meetings Act, a report by Fire Marshall Kathy Saunders about county codes, and a review of the membership with the possibility of adding utility water suppliers, and a report from Kevin Lauer, of the County Technical Assistance Service (CTAS), a state agency that provides studies and research for county governments.

City Finance Director speaks

By Mike Steely
steelym@knoxfocus.com

Jim York, Director of Finance, made some remarks last week when speaking before the Neighborhood Advisory Board's monthly meeting.

With 27 years in finance and 8 years as chief of the city's finances, York said that revenue from the sale of gasoline is down over the years despite higher gas prices. He said that a one-cent increase in fuel prices costs the city $19,000 a year as the city uses about 1.9 million gallons of gas per year for the police and fire departments and public transportation. Obviously the decrease in fuel cost over the past year has saved the city a similar amount.

When asked about the already approved city employee pay raises, York said that the budget was not amended to cover that boost and explained that the savings in fuel prices will cover the difference. It was also noted that most of the pay raise goes to "uninformed" employees such as the police and fire department.

He noted that 72% of revenue going into the general fund goes to Knox County Schools but noted that the state only require 50% as the city's part.

York also said that the KAT bus and trolley system only returns 10% on the dollar in fares. The remainder of the budget apparently comes from state, federal, and city funding. He also noted, after a question, that the city has no investment or support of the Women's National Basketball Hall of Fame.

The Finance Director said that a loss of the state's "Hall Income Tax" would hurt the city. The tax is the state's only income tax and is levied on profit from investment. He said the city could lose $ 9.7 million in revenue if the tax is ended. He also noted that sales tax and property taxes would not replace the loss. There's a move in the legislature to consider ending that tax.

"Tennessee is one of only five states with no state income tax," he said, referring to actual taxation of individual income.

"We'd miss the Hall Income Tax big time," York said.

Between now and April the various city departments will submit budget requests and on March 24th through the 26th the mayor will hold budget hearings. On April 29th Mayor Madeline Rogero presents the budget proposal.

May will see the first reading of the budget; the City Council budget meeting with a public hearing is planned for May 20. The second and final reading of the budget is planned for May 26. If City Council takes no action on the budget by June 15, the mayor's budget will be considered approved.

Louisiana's Kingfish & the Squire of Hyde Park

Huey P. Long and FDR

PART TWO

FROM THE AUTHOR'S PERSONAL COLLECTION.

Huey Long in full regalia, on parade, 1934.

By Ray Hill
rayhill865@gmail.com

Two of the most successful politicians of the same era, Huey Pierce Long and Franklin Delano Roosevelt could hardly have been more different. The handsome, courtly Roosevelt was the scion of a famous and wealthy family, the coddled and adored only child of his parents. Huey P. Long was one of nine surviving children born into a family in Winn Parish, Louisiana, one of the poorest parts of the state. Long liked to claim he had been born into a very poor family, which was not true. By the standards of the time, his family was certainly comfortable, if not well off. Long's father, Huey P. Long, Sr., was a livestock farmer and his family lived in a large home. That was a stark contrast to most of the families in Winn Parish, as most of them were dirt poor. Most families in Winn Parish subsisted on whatever they could raise on their farms and life was hard as they had few diversions and acquired little or no education. Folks were generally kind to one another, as neighbors needed one another to survive.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt was born on the estate of the family home, "Springwood", a sprawling mansion in the lush Hudson Valley of New York. Anyone who has witnessed fall in the Hudson Valley can never forget it. The trees glisten in the soft autumn sunlight as the vibrant yellows, red, and orange leaves sway gently in a soft breeze. The Hudson River, while once considered quite treacherous to navigate, flows between the banks of large estates. Among the neighbors of the Roosevelts were some of the wealthiest families in the country, including that of Ogden Mills and Frederick Vanderbilt. Robber baron financier Jay Gould bought Lydenhurst mansion, an American castle, in the Hudson Valley as his retreat from the pressures of business.

Winn Parish and the Hudson Valley were as different as Huey Long and Franklin Roosevelt.

Roosevelt attended the best schools, including Groton and Harvard. Huey's formal education ended early in his life and during a speech on the floor of the United States Senate once said, "Mr. President, I am not undertaking to answer the charge that I am ignorant. It is true. I am an ignorant man. I have had no college education. I have not even had a high school education. But the thing that takes me far in politics is that I do not have to color what comes into my mind and into my heart. I say it unvarnished. I say it without veneer. I have not the learning to do otherwise, and therefore my ignorance is often not detected."

Huey was not being entirely truthful and his mother, Caledonia, would likely have been horrified by her son's statement. While there was no public school in Winn Parish, Mrs. Long determined her own children would receive an education and she painstakingly provided an education for her youngsters. In some respects, her children received a better education than that provided by the public schools in Louisiana at the time. Huey violently protested when his parents insisted he attend a one-room schoolhouse after his parents and other parents in Winn Parish had collectively raised enough money to hire a teacher for their children.

Huey Long had actually won a scholarship to attend Louisiana State University after he had excelled in a statewide debating competition. Long felt he could not afford the cost of books and room and board, so he opted to take a job as a traveling salesman. Only seventeen years old, the irrepressible Huey Long traveled widely throughout the South selling his wares, which included cooking oils and questionable medicines.

Huey's mother had always hoped her son would be drawn to the ministry. She urged Huey to become a Baptist minister and actually sent him to attend a seminary in Shawnee, Oklahoma. Huey managed to stay for one semester, but rapidly concluded he did not want to be a preacher. Long did manage to attend the University of Oklahoma Law School briefly and his brother, Julius, who was a lawyer, gave him the money to study law at Tulane University.

Huey Long didn't complete his courses at Tulane, but managed to take a special oral exam to pass the Bar. The twenty-one year old Long passed the Bar examination with ease.

Franklin D. Roosevelt did finish all his required courses and was also a lawyer, although he was never especially interested in practicing law. Roosevelt's time in law offices was less to earn a living than a respite from his other activities. FDR was interested in politics and ran for and won a seat in the New York State Senate from an ordinarily Republican district. Franklin Roosevelt went to Albany where he became a prominent member of a number of reform minded Democrats, hostile to the powerful Tammany Hall machine, which dominated New York City's politics.

Huey Long's life was not as easy as that of Franklin Roosevelt and while he was an excellent salesman, the businesses that employed him went out of business more than once, leaving him in dire financial straights. There were occasions when Huey had to sell everything he owned, including the very coat he had been wearing. Huey went hungry and once used his apparel as collateral to buy a meal. Huey found himself sleeping wherever he could and his experience in life left him with an empathy for those who had nothing, lost whatever they had, as well as the underdog. After passing the bar examination, Huey returned to Winn Parish and opened an office in the Winnfield Bank. A wooden box served as his first desk, which was covered by a skirt hand sewn by his wife, Rose.

According to his biographer, T. Harry Williams, Huey once wrote his wife, Rose, "Everything I did, I had to do with one hand, because I've had to fight with the other."

Years later, Huey always reminded his audiences never once in his legal career had he ever represented a client against a poor man. After moving his family to Shreveport, Huey's notoriety as an attorney grew and he won a reputation for representing folks against big business. One of Huey's associates was to later recall that Huey could have become a very wealthy man from practicing law and Long once earned a fee of $40,000 for suing the Commercial National Bank successfully. That fee would represent almost a half a million dollars in today's currency.

Huey used the money to build a magnificent home for his growing family in Shreveport.

Like Franklin Roosevelt, Huey felt the call of politics and only twenty-five years old, ran for a seat on the Louisiana Railroad Commission in 1918. Long canvassed his district with no support from the political establishment or much of anyone else. Not having a wealthy family or a famous name, Huey Long campaigned person-to-person. Huey flooded north Louisiana with circulars, a feature of every Long campaign and usually written by the candidate himself. Huey Long demonstrated his speaking ability, excoriating the special interests and corporate monopolies. To the surprise of everyone, save for Huey himself, he won.

Franklin Roosevelt infuriated the powers that be inside his own party as a member of the State Senate. The boss of Tammany Hall, Charles F. Murphy, selected a candidate for the United States Senate and in those days senators were elected by state legislatures. To Boss Murphy's fury, Roosevelt and several other reform Democrats absolutely refused to back William "Blue Eyed Billy" Sheehan. The insurgents' refusal to support Sheehan infuriated Murphy, but the Boss was finally forced to withdraw Sheehan's candidacy. The wily Murphy eventually named former state Supreme Court Justice James O'Gorman as his candidate, who was elected. Yet FDR won considerable attention for his stand, as well as the notice of Governor Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey. Wilson selected FDR to serve in the post once filled by the New Yorker's famous distant cousin, Theodore Roosevelt. Franklin Roosevelt was named to serve as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, a position he held throughout the Wilson administration.

FDR's attempt to "twist the tail of the Tammany tiger" came back to haunt him when he ran for the Democratic nomination for the United States Senate in 1914. Few people remember FDR losing that particular campaign. Roosevelt had not resigned as Assistant Secretary of the Navy and returned to Washington after his failed campaign.

Meanwhile, Huey Long was doing some tail twisting of his own.

Long regularly opposed rate increases by large businesses, which had been used to having their way with the Louisiana Railroad Commission (which eventually became the Public Service Commission). The corporate entities, made livid by Huey Long's opposition, tried to have him removed from office. Instead, Huey became Chairman of the Public Service Commission in 1922. Huey gained enormous publicity when he sued the Cumberland Telephone Company, which had raised its rates by some 20%. Huey personally argued the case before the Supreme Court and won. The stunned telephone company had to provide cash rebates to more than 80,000 delighted customers, most of who remembered Huey Long.

The Chief Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court at the time was William Howard Taft. The former president was impressed with Huey's argument and later commented Long was one of the best legal minds to have come before the Court.

Public Service Commissioners in Louisiana did not run statewide, but rather from three geographic districts; Huey represented the north Louisiana district and ran for governor in 1924. Like Franklin Roosevelt, he lost his first bid for higher office. Only thirty years old, Huey campaigned furiously all across Louisiana, accusing the incumbent governor of being the creature of the Standard Oil Company. The machine inside New Orleans was opposed to Huey and he derided the "Old Regulars" as having been purchased by big business and Standard Oil.

Huey was handicapped in his 1924 campaign due to the influence of the Ku Klux Klan, which had been growing in membership and political power throughout much of the South and the Midwest. To his credit, Huey Long refused to play to racial or religious prejudice. Still, he ran a close third in the Democratic primary, barely missing a spot in the run off election. An astute politician, Huey was beside himself when the first precinct reported him winning 60 to 1.

"I'm beat," Huey cried. "There should have been 100 for me and 1 against me. Forty percent of my country vote is lost in that box."

Franklin D. Roosevelt's political career was hardly over after his defeat for the United States Senate in 1914. He was the choice of Governor James Cox of Ohio, the 1920 Democratic presidential nominee, as his running mate. The two campaigned hard on the League of Nations, which had been the cause and obsession of a seriously ailing President Woodrow Wilson. It was the first year women could vote in every state in the nation and Ohio Senator Warren G. Harding won in a landslide.

FDR returned to New York, occasionally practicing law, dabbling in businesses, making some investments (which were oftentimes bizarre and lost money), and living the life of a country squire.

Huey Long ran for governor again in 1928; it was during that campaign Long's slogan of "Every Man A King" was born. Huey was also careful to note while every man would be a king, no one would wear a crown.

When Huey Long began his campaign, Louisiana politics was extraordinarily corrupt; it would remain corrupt for decades to come. State politics was dominated by the machine in New Orleans headed by the "Old Regulars". The New Orleans machine was allied with sheriffs and courthouse rings all across the state, as well as business interests. Much of the funding for the campaigns and candidates supported by the Old Regulars came from the large oil and utility companies, interests that were bitter opponents of Huey Long.

When Huey Long ran for governor of Louisiana in 1928, there were some three hundred miles of paved roads in the entire state; public education for most people was illusory, if not actually completely absent. If there was a public school in a particular community, most parents could not even afford to buy the necessary textbooks. Many of the state's poorer citizens didn't even vote, as they could not afford to pay the poll tax required by state law. Worst of all, the property tax structure in Louisiana placed a disproportionate burden upon the poor and middle class.

Hampered as he was by the inability of many of his poor rural supporters to actually vote for him, Huey Long campaigned at an almost inhuman pace. Long preached a message of change and reform, telling his audiences if he was elected governor, there would be a new day in Louisiana. While the voters had heard that before, they correctly sensed Huey Long meant it.

Long campaigned on a platform of bridges, roads, health care, improved education for all citizens, and he promised to revise the tax structure. Once again, Huey Long astounded and confounded the political professionals; winning the first primary by such a large margin his nearest opponent concluded pressing for a run off election would be fruitless.

Huey had traversed some fifteen thousand miles of Louisiana's dirt roads, which were mud when it rained. Long appeared in towns and hamlets that had never seen a candidate for governor before. Painting himself as a poor country boy, Long captivated his audiences, which numbered in the thousands. Huey Long spoke over the radio and published his own campaign newspaper.

Long's election changed the dynamic of Louisiana politics forever. His dynasty continued until 1987, when his son, Russell, retired from the United States Senate. The Longs are the only family in history to have a father, mother and son serve in the U. S. Senate.

The special interests, wealthy planter class, and corporate businesses that had ruled Louisiana since its purchase by President Thomas Jefferson from Napoleon had come to an end. The Long machine would come to dominate the state even more effectively for a generation and beyond.

Nothing has changed but the name at one of North Knoxville's most popular salons.

Owner Erin Goode says that the salon at 3501 Tazewell Pike, formerly known as Salon Mira Mira, is now the Symmetry Salon.

"We still have the same wonderful staff and are a Paul Mitchell Focus Salon. We offer all the Paul Mitchell products and color lines," Goode said.

"We're the only Paul Mitchell Focus Salon in the area. Our staff has Paul Mitchell classes every six weeks to stay up on fashion trends and techniques," she said.

Goode started the salon eight years and she is a mom, a nurse, and a stylist. She said she was a cosmetologist first and worked as a stylist while attending nursing school and until her second child was born. She is assisted at Symmetry Salon by her mother, Terri Rose, who helps manage, and by her sister, Ashley Raby, who is the accountant.

The salon features a boutique and has opened a spa upstairs offering massage therapy and facials, waxing, body wraps, and spray tans. The salon also has an ethnic hair specialist, Sherry Walker.

Other specialists at the Symmetry Salon include cosmetologists Melody Lopusser, Sherry Walker, Jessica Hogle, Melinda Hill, Amanda Wyrick, Nicole Plunk, Kimberly Roberts and Lillian Mora. Estheticians include Bailee Milsap and Kristin Keith. The Message therapists are Angelita Dunaway and Chastity Stalcup and the front desk coordinator is Natali Peters.

"I really appreciate our loyal customers and the staff that stayed during the name change," she said, adding that most of the clients are North Knoxville residents but that several also drive in from West Knoxville.

Listening to Music

Recently, I rode in a van with fellow workers back from a trip to deliver cars to Nashville. At some point, I started listening to my iPod to help pass the time. It's surprising just how much listening to music has changed in my lifetime.

My first memories of music came through a little white radio that sat on a corner shelf in the kitchen. Each morning we boys would dress and then arrive at the table to eat cream of wheat or cinnamon toast. All the while, WIVK AM played in the background. I remember Claude Tomlinson as he and his so-called sidekick Lester played music, gave news headlines, and announced birthdays.

By Joe Rector
joerector@comcast.net

shared any of the music that played. I wanted one of those small radios, even though hearing anything depended upon what station might have the strongest signal. On occasion, I'd see Dal holding the transistor over his head or turning slowly to pick up the signal.

When we were not more than 9 or 10, our parents bought a cabinet stereo for the family. It was a gigantic piece of furniture with orange material covering the speakers. The turn table and radio were hidden under a hinged door. Each payday, Daddy would take us to purchase ONE 45 record. We added "The Wings of a Snow White Dove," "Burning Ring of Fire," and "Puff the Magic Dragon" to our collection. Other albums were added, and we boys would play them as we cleaned house on Saturday. I'd lip-sync songs from The Diamonds, Jerry Lewis, and Allan Sherman. As we grew older, LP's by the Four Tops and Temptations were added.

During my senior year in high school, Mother bought us a Studebaker Lark to drive to college the next year. Our first order of business was wiring speakers and an eight-track player into the dash. We'd cruise along in a rather "lame" car and blare music by Chicago and Blood, Sweat, and Tears. For heavier music, we cranked up Iron Butterfly's "In a Gadda Da Vida." Unfortunately, the player outlived the car, which threw a rod on Monterey Mountain during one trip home.

I had a component system in college. The sound from the set up was superior to anything I'd had before. My collection of records grew, and I played them the first three years and filled my time that sure wasn't going toward dating anyone. Even after Amy and I were married, the system sat in special places in our apartments and houses.

Before long, we added a cassette player. It was a fantastic machine that dwarfed the cartridges played by the eight-track. Too, copies of music could be made on blank tapes. Yes, I was party to the first music piracy without knowing it. It was the only way folks with modest incomes could enjoy a variety of music. I'd carry a case of cassettes in the car anytime I traveled. A player had to be installed in the Datsun 310 that I drove.

More recently, iPods became popular. I purchased one with 4gigs of memory, and before long, the thing was filled. I'd download music from a song library on the computer. Over the years I've had three iPods, none of which have data plans. Still, listening to my choices of music is enjoyable on them. Lots of folks add their music to iPhones, but mine is so old that it can't hold much. I also struggle when I try to sync it to a Bluetooth device. I'm just not savvy enough to do it right, so I hand the iPod to the younger generations, my children or my six-year-old grandson, and they fix it for me.

Even on the computer I can listen to hard-to-find songs by clicking on things like Pandora or iHeartRadio. It's ingenious how someone figured out how to play music in that way. I can set up my own stations and listen to only music that suits my taste.

Devices have changed over time. They are smaller, offer better quality sound, and hold literally thousands of songs. Still, I'm not so sure that music sounds any better now than it did when I was younger. Something magical comes with a turntable and record albums. My taste in songs is still stuck in the 60's and 70's. I'm convinced that older is better when it comes to how music is played.

Vols at the SEC Tournament

By Alex Norman

The commonly held view was that Tennessee, losers of 8 of their previous 10 games, would be a quick out at the SEC Tournament.

But if we learned anything about this Vols basketball team, it is to expect that they won't go quietly.

In Tennessee's first game in Nashville, against rival Vanderbilt, the Vols rallied in the second half and stunned the Commodores 67-61.

"We haven't played well quite a few times this year. But we have played the right way in regard to competing and playing to the final buzzer, sharing the basketball and all those things we got to do to even have a chance to win," said Tennessee head coach Donnie Tyndall. "Even when we were down 12 or 13 with eight to go, we said in the huddle, 'We're going to find a way to win this game, just keep grinding.' And our team did that. There's no quit in this team."

Senior guard Josh Richardson has been the leader of this team since the start of practice, and those leadership qualities were on display midway through the second half. During a timeout, with the Vols down double digits and the season slipping away, he had a talk with his teammates.

"I just said that we were playing like we didn't want to be here, like we didn't know how to play basketball," said Richardson. "I told them we were going to be on our way home if we didn't turn it around. I think we definitely picked it up right after that timeout."

With under 6:30 remaining the Vols started a run to remember with a sophomore guard Robert Hubbs III three-pointer. That brought Tennessee (16-15) within 9. On their next possession Kevin Punter hit a 3 of his own, and UT was only down 6. The momentum was squarely on the Vols side.

With 4:30 to go it was Derek Reese knocking down a triple, and Tennessee was within 3.

The Vols would make a free throw and with 3:17 remaining, and when Hubbs converted a layup the game was even at 59. That capped a 12-0 run and it was anyone's contest.

Grace Christian will try to build on first state tourney win

By Steve Williams

Grace Christian Academy finally got a taste of victory in the TSSAA state basketball tournament and the Rams hope to go back for a bigger bite.

Luke Shepherd and Kobe Kelley – the only two seniors on the 2014-15 squad – led the way as GCA made history this year.

Sophomore Connor Arnold, who hit the winning shot in a 54-52 quarterfinal win over Clay County in the Class A quarterfinal round at Murfreesboro last week, will lead three starters and a large number of returnees next season.

The Rams were eliminated by defending state champion Memphis Mitchell 72-37 in the semifinals and finished 24-9 in their first season under Coach Mike Doig.

"I'm proud of how we played," said Shepherd after the loss to Mitchell, which advanced to the finals with a 31-6 record. "We came out and executed what we were supposed to do and did everything possible. They're a good team."

"We've worked hard to get where we need to be," added Shepherd, "and it'll be exciting to see how Connor and the guys will continue after Kobe and me are gone."

"It's exciting to make this step and win our first game in the state tournament, especially with these guys. We've come so close together as a

Lady Vol fans should boycott NCAA home games

By Steve Williams

Forget the protesting, the petition, the pleading.

If fans really want to make a statement regarding the pending takeover of the iconic Lady Vol logo and nickname from all University of Tennessee women's athletic teams except basketball, they'll boycott the first and second round games Tennessee is expected to play at Thompson-Boling Arena in the upcoming NCAA basketball tournament.

This, I believe, is the only thing that will get the attention of the UT top brass.

Yep, hit 'em in the pocket-book.

Nothing else has seemed to work over the past four months.

Athletic Director Dave Hart hasn't budged a bit since announcing UT's branding restructure on Nov. 10, 2014.

And UT Chancellor Jimmy G. Cheek is just a yes man for Hart.

UT president Joseph DiPietro threw in his two cents late last month when he told the university's Board of Trustees the Lady Vol logo change was not up for debate.

On July 1, all Tennessee athletic teams – women as well as men – will be known as "Volunteers" and have the Power T logo, except women's basketball, which will continue to be known as the Lady Vols and have the Lady Vol logo.

The women's basketball program has been excluded from the new branding, the university states, because of the accomplishments and legacy of the championship program built by former coach Pat Summitt and her players.

The Lady Vol identity change will coincide with the switch from adidas to Nike apparel. Some even feel Nike had a say-so in making the controversial changes. UT last week reportedly wouldn't give up Nike's e-mails, either.

The identity change also is supposed to be part of the new "One Tennessee" campaign, which is hoped to unite all athletic programs at UT. However, some of the women athletes on non-basketball teams feel a little slighted by the decision that they soon will no longer be officially called Lady Vols, even though they believe

Bearden opens indoor softball complex

By Ken Lay

Inclement weather won't be quite the damper that it once was for the Bearden High School softball team.

The school recently built an indoor practice facility, which sits on the third base side of its softball complex. The 4,200-square foot building contains eight hitting stations, a pair of pitching alleys, a video room, a weight area and a study area.

The project was more than two years in the making according to Lady Bulldogs' coach Leonard Sams, who has re-vitalized the program during his tenure as head coach.

"We started talking about this a couple of summers ago," Sams said. "We've been talking about it for two years. Originally, it was just supposed to be a wall and a roof and then we started talking about a building.

"Now, we have a weight area, a video room with a flat screen TV, eight hitting stations, two pitching alleys and a place where the girls can do their homework. There's simply no more excuses for us anymore."

Work on the new facility, which is named the Leonard Sams Softball Complex, was slated to begin in January. The facility was set to be built just past the right-field fence. But logistics dictated that it be moved to the other side of the ball park.

The change of location forced the project to be delayed until mid-February.

"The project was delayed as of January because we had to change the location," said Sams, who was stunned that the new facility was named in his honor. "Work started on this about the same time as that cold snap hit.

"These guys came in here and worked in the cold and the snow and our athletic director Nathan Lynn and our principal Dr. [John] Bartlett are amazing administrators and they helped make this dream come true, along with our parents and the community. The support in the community for Bearden High School athletics and the people who worked on this were outstanding."

Renovations to the softball stadium at Bearden are far from complete. Sams said that plans are in the works for a new concession stand and dressing facilities. Work will begin on those projects this summer.

With 2:13 to go and the game tied at 61, Richardson drew two defenders to him, passed the ball back to Hubbs for a three in the corner. It was the biggest shot of the game, and gave Tennessee a lead they would not relinquish.

"I just had to bring some energy to my team," said Hubbs, who tied a career high with 16 points. "We needed a pick up when we were down 12. So if I got a free look, I was going to take it. Coach said to treat this game like it's free balls. That's what we did at the end there. They went in, so I kept shooting them."

Vanderbilt (19-13) was in panic mode. On the Commodores' next possession they failed to even get a shot off before the shot clock ran out.

Tennessee would finish the game on an unlikely 20-2 run, earning them a spot in the SEC quarterfinals, and a date with Arkansas on Friday, March 13th. The Vols and Razorbacks split two meetings this season, with each team winning on their own home floor.

they work just as hard in their sports as the basketball players.

Former and current Lady Vol athletes, as well as fans, have made their voices heard but to no avail.

At a state capitol rally for women's issues, a small group of activists held up signs that read, "Save the Lady Vols."

State Representative Roger Kane of Knoxville hosted a Lady Vols Day on The Hill.

A website, www.bringbacktheladyvols.com, has posted letters from former and current Lady Vols.

A petition reportedly contained over 15,000 signatures to reverse the UT decision in early March.

Last week, critics were still waiting for an explanation that made sense.

Many also ask, why was such a change even necessary?

UT's men's and women's athletic programs were one of the last in the country to merge in 2012, but the merger didn't alter the Lady Vols' feeling of distinction. They still had their own logo and nickname.

It's a logo and nickname that's probably the most recognizable in the nation for collegiate women's athletics.

"We had our own identity," said a former Lady Vol softball player. "A lot of history and pride goes with that. It's not just basketball, it's all of us."

Boycotting the NCAA tourney games would be a way for Lady Vol basketball fans to show they care for all Lady Vol teams. The Lady Vol basketball players themselves could feel good about contributing to the cause as well.

Year in and year out, most first and second-round games do not draw large crowds, but Lady Vol fans usually outnumber opposing fan bases by far in these early round contests.

UT leaders would be foolish and shortsighted to think a boycott couldn't be repeated in a future regular season game as well. If social media can organize an Orange and White checkerboard stadium for a Tennessee football game in a matter of days, it can organize Lady Vol fans to boycott for a worthy cause.

Hopefully, a two-game boycott would be enough for Lady Vol fans to get what they want.

They wouldn't let you tell them. So show them.

Hardin Valley's Dylan Harris crosses the plate after a two-run homer in the Hawks' 15-1 victory over William Blount last Monday. Harris is being congratulated by Seth Hunt (12) while Tyler Thompson (2) awaits his chance at the plate.

Hawks use patience, long ball to win opener

By Ken Lay

Hardin Valley Academy's baseball team might've squandered a first-inning scoring chance in its season opener. But the Hawks didn't any other opportunities get away in a 15-1 victory over William Blount on Monday, March 9 at HVA.

The Hawks tried to mount a two-out rally in the bottom of the first inning but William Blount pitcher Sam Taylor averted damage when he induced Zach Sears to fly out to center field. Hardin Valley stranded two runners in the opening frame of the season and District 4-AAA opener for both schools.

But Taylor couldn't get through the second inning as the Hawks mounted another two-out rally that produced nine runs (eight unearned) on just three hits.

Hardin Valley's Ian Pung

drew a leadoff walk in the second inning. He took second base on a passed ball and stole third. He scored two outs later on a double by Dom Leo to give the Hawks a 1-0 lead.

And that was a start for big things for the Hawks (1-0 overall, 1-0 in the district). Dylan Harris hit a two-run homer after Seth Hunt reached on an error.

HVA left fielder Tyler Thompson then reached on another defensive miscue by the Governors and later swiped second base. He then came home on an RBI single by catcher Anthony Gambuzza to make the score 4-0.

Then the Hawks became patient at the plate and scored when Landon Beyer was hit by a pitch with the bases loaded. The Hawks scored the rest of their runs on bases loaded walks.

Hawks' coach Joe

Michalski was pleased by his squad's patience in the second inning.

"Last year, we struggled with soft pitching," Michalski said. "Tonight, we were patient."

"We had guys who could've selfishly swung at borderline pitches but tonight, we were patient. We took the walks and let the next guy come up and have a go at it."

The Governors plated a run in the top of the third. Ethan Laudermilk was hit by a pitch to open the inning and scored on a double by Chris Falcon to make the score 9-1.

Hardin Valley then answered with four runs in the bottom of the frame. With one out, Gambuzza, Sears and Pung all walked.

The trio then scored when Matt Martin hit a grand slam to make the score 13-1.

The Hawks added two more runs in the fourth inning in a game that was called by the run rule after the top of the fifth inning.

Sears drove in a run with a sacrifice fly and Pung had an RBI single.

Hawks' starting pitcher Will Neely, a University of Tennessee commitment, gave up one run and two hits in three innings. He finished with four strikeouts but wasn't all that happy with his performance.

"I felt like I could've done better," Neely said. "I didn't really have command of my curve ball and I'll have to work that out in my next bullpen [session]."

Drew Parks and Greg Valentine each pitched an inning of scoreless relief for the Hawks in the victory.

Bulldogs walk their way to victory over Sequoyah

By Ken Lay

Bearden High School's baseball team got off to a fast start Thursday night but had to nab a walk-off victory against Sequoyah.

The Bulldogs, who scored six runs in the first two-innings, notched an early-season 10-9 victory over the Chiefs when Brock Vaughn drew a one-out bases-loaded walk that plated Bryson Ford with the game-winning run in the second game of a double header at BHS's Phil Garner Ball Park.

That win came on the heels of a 7-6 walk-off win in the first game of a twilight-night twin bill in the Bearden Invitational.

Bulldogs' coach John Rice knew that his team's two wins on Thursday wouldn't net too many style points but that was of little consequence for Bearden's third-year head coach.

"We had to come back a couple of times," Rice said. "But it's early in the season and this was a chance for both teams to get some reps and play 14 innings of baseball.

"And with this weather, who knows when we'll get to play again? Both teams played hard and we used a lot of players."

Bearden (3-0) opened the game with three runs in the bottom of the first inning. Ford led off the frame with a single. Brady Duncan also singled before David Beam walked to load the bases.

Ford scored the game's first run when he came home on Vaughn's bases-loaded walk. Bearden

Tough and composed Fulton gets it done in crunch time

By Steve Williams

It's called crunch time. The last few minutes of a high school basketball game when the final outcome is still on the line.

Fulton found itself in that position against Ripley in the semifinals of the Class AA state tournament in Murfreesboro last Friday night.

With a state title berth up for grabs, crunch time was magnified even more.

Composure and toughness pulled the Falcons through, as they turned back Ripley 64-56.

"Late in the ball game, it's really a simple formula," said veteran Fulton coach Jody Wright. "You got to make stops, take care of the basketball and have good possessions, and I thought that was a big thing. We had some good possessions late."

Crunch time for this nail-biting contest arrived at MTSU's Murphy Center with just under four minutes remaining when Tigers sharpshooter Chad Culbreath swished in a 3-point shot from the left wing to put Ripley ahead 50-49.

Fulton took the lead back as Larry Roe answered with a 3-pointer.

When Ripley fell behind by four, the little No. 11 (Culbreath) took the reins for his team, drove in close and kissed a shot off the glass. A timeout was immediately called with 2:05 on the clock and when the Tigers retook the floor, they turned up the defensive pressure. Fulton handled it. And three Falcons - Kentel Williams, Roe and Yasmond Fenderson - got check marks on the play-by-play sheet down the stretch.

Williams, junior point guard, drew a foul and sank two clutch free throws with 1:38 left. Roe, junior wing, swished in a trey from the top of the key. Fenderson pretty much sealed the deal when he stuck in an offensive rebound and then got a defensive rebound on the other end and was fouled. The senior wing's free throw gave the Falcons an 8-point cushion with 36 seconds left.

Fenderson and Williams finished with 13 points apiece and Roe tallied 11 to lead the Fulton scoring.

Fenderson also had 10 rebounds, while Joe Kimber grabbed nine boards and Ethan Williams pulled in seven.

"We knew Ripley was going to be strong on the boards and they rebounded us a lot of the game," said Coach Wright, "but I felt like the last four minutes we were pretty stout on the boards."

Culbreath led the West Tennesseans with 20 points and Isaiah Crawley chipped in 11.

Fulton would take a 28-4 record into Saturday night's championship game against Haywood (34-2).

Ripley, which had been to only one previous state tourney, ended one of the best seasons in the school's history with a 30-12 worksheet. This was the school's winningest and best scoring team, said Coach Lonnie Starks.

"We just could not buy a basket tonight, but you got to give Fulton credit for that because they played great defense - scrappin', shovin', divin' for loose balls. They outmuscled us."

Fulton defeated Creek Wood 71-63 in the quarterfinal round as Kimber led the way with 16 points. The Red Hawks came into the state with only one loss.

CARTER FALLS: Haywood pulled out a 74-69 win over Carter in quarterfinal action, ending the Runnin' Hornets' season at 27-3. Jordan Bowden led Carter with 26 points. Kelvin Jackson added 15 and Blake Dutton 12.

The Hornets were making their second straight state tourney appearance under Coach Joby Boydstone.

Seniors lead 'most successful run' by Lady Bulldogs

By Steve Williams

Bearden High coach Justin Underwood lauded his seniors, Olivia Pfeifer and Madison Rice, after the Lady Bulldogs' 2014-15 season ended in the Class AAA state tournament semifinals March 14 at Murfreesboro.

"Our senior captains this year did a phenomenal job leading our team on and off the court," said Underwood. "They have been a part of the most successful run in Bearden girls basketball history."

That run included 104 wins, two state tournament appearances, three district championships (two in regular season and one tournament) and a region championship.

"These young ladies have built something special in their time here," added Underwood.

Bearden opened with a 57-49 quarterfinal win over Dickson County (32-3) at the state. Murfreesboro Oakland handed the Lady Bulldogs a 63-54 loss in the semifinals.

"I was very proud of how we played at the state tournament," said Coach Underwood. "We had a hard fought win over a state ranked Dickson County (32-3) team with just two losses on the year."

"In the semifinals, we played a very good Oakland team that we fought to final buzzer. The slow start in the first quarter against Oakland seemed to ultimately be our downfall as they out rebounded us early on.

"I couldn't be prouder of these young ladies and all they accomplished this year. To have an undefeated district record and finish in the final four at the state tournament says a lot about the work ethic and teamwork these ladies committed to this season."

Bearden finished with a 31-5 record.

WELL DONE: Fulton lost four good players, said Coach John Fisher, and returned only two starters - Moneisha Thomas and KeKeMcKinney - from the 2013-14 team, which made it to the Class AA state finals before bowing to Elizabethton.

The Lady Falcons made it to this season's sectional game, where their season ended with a 59-46 loss to Grainger.

"Looking at the season as a whole, I think they did well," said Fisher. "I was pleased with winning the region. I would have liked to have made it to the state tourney like all coaches do. But it wasn't meant to be."

"I thought the kids played hard. We had to beat CAK and Gatlinburg-Pittman on back to back nights to win the region championship. I'm proud of the kids. We didn't reach the state tournament, which is a goal, but we won the region, which was another goal."

MOTIVATED: Grainger avenged last season's controversial loss at Fulton with a 59-46 win over the Lady Falcons in this year's Class AA sectional game.

"I think it was (a motivation)," said Grainger coach Justin Combs, who saw his team last season suffer a controversial loss when Fulton scored the winning basket just before the final buzzer, after play continued following an inadvertent whistle.

"We felt like the way that game ended that it was a little bit of a hard pill to swallow, so to speak," said Combs. "We tried to find a lesson in it somehow. We also said that if it had went the other way, and the break had fell in our lap, we would have taken it. And we would have went to state and enjoyed it just like Fulton did. So we tried not to begrudge it too much."

team. We're a brotherhood. We love one another." As for his basketball future, Shepherd said he will weigh an offer he has received to play at the University of Charleston in West Virginia.

Arnold said he got a "friendly roll" in his winning shot against the Clay County Bulldogs (27-5).

"That was an exciting game and such a huge step in my young career," said Arnold.

"It's going to be tough losing Kobe and Luke, but we have guys who can step up and lead the team next year and I hope to be one of those guys, too."

"We also have some eighth graders coming up who are solid players. I think the future is bright for our program and we're going to work our butts off to get back here and maybe get to the state championship game."

Grace Christian took a 4-0 lead at the start against Mitchell and trailed only 20-13 after one period. But the talented and athletic Tigers, getting a combined 40 points from guards Naba Echols and Jeremiah Martin, extended their lead to 37-19 at halftime and 50-31 after three stops. Arnold made 7 of 10 field goal attempts and scored 15 points to lead GCA. He also collected six rebounds. Shepherd contributed eight points and two assists.

Sophomore Ben Andrews and junior Robby Windham chipped in five points each. "It's a fantastic year," said Coach Doig, "and to finish 24-9 with this group of guys and the teams we competed against and played against and learned to battle against, these guys as a group were fantastic. I really believe they did some overachieving."

McGee's passion, effort nets flagpoles for HVA baseball

By Ken Lay

He's not a baseball player or not even much of a fan but Hardin Valley Academy senior Isaiah McGee has made a mark on the school's baseball program.

McGee, a transfer student from Karns High School, noticed that Hardin Valley's baseball complex was the only outdoor sports facility without a flagpole.

And he set out to do something about it. He raised money for two flagpoles, which now sit over the outfield fence.

The project was a labor of love for McGee, who will join the Navy after his graduation.

"I did this all on my own," said McGee, a member of the United States Navy Cadet Corps. "This wasn't part of a senior project or anything like that. It was just something that I wanted to do. I was in the ROTC color guard during by two years at Karns.

"I have a passion for the American flag and our state flag. Our football stadium has a flagpole and our softball field has a flagpole. Our baseball field didn't have a flagpole and I wanted it to have one."

So he set out to raise funds in an effort that took a little more than a month.

"It took me about a month-and-a-half to raise the money and now the baseball field has two flagpoles," McGee said.

McGee, who undertook the project despite not being a baseball fan, then bought the baseball team an American Flag and Tennessee State flag with his own money.

"It only took two weeks for me to buy both of the flags," he said. "I get paid every two weeks from my job. I work at the Hard-ee's on Campbell Station Road."

Hardin Valley opened its 2015 baseball season on Monday, March 9 and the Hawks honored McGee's accomplishment before their 15-1 District 4-AAA victory over William Blount.

McGee, a United States Navy Seaman Recruit, threw out the ceremonial first pitch before the season opener against the Governors and he'll always remember that experience.

"I have my baseball that coach [Joe Michalski] gave me," he said. "I'm acquainted with him but I'm not one of his students and I was very thrilled to have that experience.

"I'm not much of a baseball fan or a sports fan but I do like to be a part of rooting for my team."

Bearden does enough to remain unbeaten

By Ken Lay

Bearden High School's softball team has had its share of offensive struggles early in 2015 but the Lady Bulldogs have done enough at the plate to win its first pair of District 4-AAA games this year.

"We've gotten two wins but they haven't been blowouts," Bearden coach Leonard Sams said after his veteran squad nabbed a 4-1 victory over Lenoir City Thursday night at Kim Hazelwood Field. "Our biggest thing is that we need to relax at the plate.

"We didn't get consistent disciplined swings early. We hit the ball hard but we hit it right at them. You have to give Lenoir City credit because they did a good job and they made plays."

Bearden (2-0 overall, 2-0 in the district) might've struggled with the off-speed stuff of Lady Panthers' pitcher Emily Collins but the Lady Bulldogs did just enough to score two runs in the bottom of the first inning.

The first three Bearden hitters reached base as Rachael Goodson singled before Harly Hennen reached on an error and Cassidy Heemsoth legged out a bunt single to load the bases. Senior short-stop Alaeni Ray, a University of Tennessee commitment, then doubled to score Goodson and Hennen to give the home team a 2-0 lead.

Bearden took its first lead before Collins recorded an out and appeared poised for a big inning but Collins averted further damage by retiring the next three Bearden hitters.

Ray said that the lack of practice time due to the recent inclement weather has hindered the Lady Bulldogs, who opened their season with a 4-1 victory at Heritage Tuesday night.

"We're definitely a little rusty but the rust is coming off fast," she said. "We're just happy to be on the field.

"I hate being cooped up and the field is where we belong. People talk about how tough it is to face fast pitching but the slow pitchers are just as dangerous."

While Bearden struggled to master Collins, the Lady Panthers (0-1, 0-1) had their own struggles with Lady Bulldogs' pitcher Dana Steinbacher, who threw her second consecutive one-hitter and had 14 strikeouts.

Lenoir City did manage to score and pull to within 2-1 in the top of the fourth. In that frame, Hally Adams got a leadoff single and stole second. She scored two outs later when Madison Moats reached on a fielder's choice.

After that, Steinbacher, who struck out the side in the first, third and fifth innings, was dominant. Lenoir City had just three base runners after the fourth thanks to two hit batters and a defensive miscue by the Lady Bulldogs.

Bearden picked up two more runs in the fifth on an RBI double by Heemsoth. First baseman Kierstyn Freeman also drove in a run on a groundout.

but just let it make us more determined, make us work harder."

Grainger stopped Westmoreland 36-30 in state quarterfinals but was eliminated by McMinn Central 49-44 in the semis.

GREAT GAME: "That's kind of what I was thinking in my mind the whole fourth quarter," said Farragut coach Jason Mayfield after his Lady Admirals edged Bearden 52-51 to capture the Region 2-AAA tournament championship on March 1 at Bearden.

"Man, this is a great environment, great basketball game, a lot of passion from both teams," continued

Mayfield. "That's what high school sports should be about. Whether we had won or loss, obviously it's easy for me to say that now, but that was a great game for our kids to be a part of."

Jaiden McCoy scored the winning basket inside with two seconds remaining.

took a 2-0 lead when a hit by starting pitcher Brandon Trammell plated Duncan. Josh Smith drove in Bearden's third run on a fielder's choice.

The Bulldogs, who won their season opener over Maryville on Monday, March 9 and saw Wednesday's home tilt against rival Farragut rained out, added three more runs in the second off Sequoyah starter Ben Arp.

Beam hit a two-run homer and Duncan had an RBI single to double Bearden's advantage.

The Chiefs (1-2) didn't, however, go quietly. They scored twice in the third and added two more runs in fifth to pull to within 6-4.

Sequoyah pulled even in the sixth on a two-run single by Blue Johnson.

The Bulldogs regained the lead in the bottom of the inning. Duncan led off the frame with a double and scored when Beam doubled to make the score 7-6.

The Chiefs responded with three runs in the top of the seventh when Robby Chancellor had a two-run double and later scored on an error to give the visitors a 9-7 lead.

That set the stage for Bearden's dramatic comeback.

Pinch hitter Thomas Wilson opened the frame with an infield single and scored on Connor Cameron's game-tying two-run homer. One out later, Ford singled. He advanced to second on Duncan's infield hit. Beam walked to load the bases before Vaughn drew the game-ending free pass.

Gene Cantley

By Ralphine Major

He was the only sophomore on the team. Gene Cantley played guard for Head Coach Bob Dagley's 1964-65 Gibbs Eagles when he was called on as the team marched toward their 31-2 record.

Dagley remembers the player who wore No. 12. "He was able to handle the ball well and set the offense in motion. Gene had a soft one-handed set shot--but did not shoot often--leaving the scoring to others," Dagley said. "But when he did shoot, he was accurate," the Coach recalls. Cantley also contributed to the success of the 1966 team the following year. The team won the KIL Division A Championship, and Coach Dagley was named KIL Coach of the Year. In Cantley's last year at Gibbs, he served as captain of the basketball team.

The youngest player on Dagley's team is quick to praise the head coach. "He was a man's man," Gene said. "He was quiet spoken and a good coach to play for," he added.

I can remember our family attending church with Cantley's young family at Fairview Baptist. But, I did not realize until now that Gene played on the outstanding 1965 basketball team at Gibbs.

Next week completes the feature on No. 12, Gene Cantley. (This is No. 42 in the series.)

Rheumatism

Aches and pains are a fact of life as you get older. I don't remember a lot of painful conditions as a kid, even with injuries. My brothers and I often went barefoot in those halcyon days of summer, and I remember a "stone bruise" of my heel that once hobbled me for a month. However, all my body parts "worked" when I was a boy. I can't say the same now.

Most of us north of sixty deal with aches and stiffness. Many patients ask me about their "rheumatism," especially when they need a remedy. From a practical standpoint the first step is to decide whether someone has an inflammatory arthritic syndrome such as rheumatoid arthritis (RA) or garden variety soreness. RA is the prototypical inflammatory arthritis and is not granny's rheumatism. RA occurs in a genetically predisposed person when their immune system mistakes joint tissues as foreign agents and then attacks. The result is painful swollen joints which are often red and hot. Joint dysfunction is progressive. Stiffness that lasts more than an hour is a tip that something unusual is occurring, as opposed to my stiffness which abates with a few minutes of stretching or a hot shower.

Inflammatory illness differs by degree and is associated with significant fatigue. Diseases like rheumatoid arthritis should be evaluated by an internist or a rheumatologist. Orthopedics is a surgical discipline and is not the specialist you should first consult for joint pain unless related to previous surgery or an injury. Sometimes simple blood tests for inflammatory markers can be helpful in excluding systemic diseases like RA. However, the absence of inflammatory signs and symptoms are often enough to reassure someone and to begin comfort-directed treatment.

"Steroids" like prednisone, dexamethasone, etc. are potent drugs that suppress inflammation, but serious side effects soon occur with continuous usage. It's been almost seventy years since Professor Philip Hench first used glucocorticoids (steroids) on patients with rheumatoid arthritis. The results were dramatic and invalids literally began to walk again. Unfortunately, treatment soon caused severe obesity and diabetes.

A call from a patient of mine and a recent article in JAMA (the Journal of the American Medical Association) caused me to reconsider this topic. My patient didn't have symptoms or signs of an inflammatory arthritis. However, his request for an NSAID, non-steroid anti-inflammatory drug, was complicated by his cardiovascular disease.

NSAIDs were developed to avoid steroid complications. Aspirin is the prototype of this class of non-steroid anti-inflammatory drug. The active ingredient of aspirin was first discovered in the bark of willow trees in 1763. Then in 1971 it was discovered that aspirin reduces inflammation and prevents blood clots by inhibiting prostaglandin production. Finally, in the 1990s two isoforms of the COX enzyme (cyclooxygenase) system which produce prostaglandins were discovered. Aspirin and many older NSAIDs inhibit both COX 1&2 and produce desirable anti-inflammatory effects, but also cause undesirable effects like ulcers and bleeding. Soon drugs that preferentially blocked the COX 2 enzyme were developed hopefully to minimize side effects. You may recognize the names Celebrex and Vioxx. Unfortunately, things are complicated and soon other adverse cardiovascular effects of the COX 2 inhibiting drugs surfaced.

In Denmark most NSAIDs are only available with a prescription rather than in America where drugs like ibuprofen (Motrin, Nuprin) and naproxin (Aleve) are available OTC (over-the-counter). A large study was recently reported in JAMA. I won't get into medicalese or the arcane nuances of study design, but I think there are important take home points. The study was done in patients with known cardiovascular disease, who were taking low dose aspirin or clopidogrel (Plavix) or warfarin to prevent further heart attacks. The researchers found that the risk of bleeding and heart attacks were increased when study patients received NSAIDs along with their other medications. Furthermore, bleeding often occurred with only three days of treatment and the COX 2 medications were not any safer than the older agents like aspirin.

There is no such thing as a perfectly safe medication, supplement or treatment. If you give enough people any medication, sooner or later someone will have a problem. On the other hand, many medications improve our lives. An example is using low dose aspirin to prevent another a heart attack. The 20% reduction justifies the generally low risk of bleeding. Everything has a risk to benefit ratio. I don't recommend low dose aspirin for patients without heart disease because the benefit is so low making the small bleeding risk proportionately greater - especially if someone slips on ice and pops their noggin.

People often discount the benefits of simple acetaminophen or Tylenol

(not an NSAID). I agree that NSAIDs work better when there is inflammation. Any injury such as broken bones or surgical incisions produce inflamed areas that are red, hot and swollen. Consequently, the benefits may justify NSAID therapy. However, if you're just stiff and sore, simple stretching exercises and Tylenol in moderation may be quite helpful and safer - that is unless you're getting liquored up each evening! Tylenol and alcohol are not good companions.

One day an elderly lady repeatedly queried me about her chronic rheumatism. I carefully explained the problem and offered treatment options three times. Unfortunately, she seemed to be hung up like a scratched record and the same questions were asked. Because Ms. Jones and I had a long term relationship, I finally took the risk and told her that if she awakened tomorrow without her misery it would mean she had passed on. The Master used hyperbole to get people's attention and it worked with Ms. Jones, who then chuckled as the meaning of my ridiculous statement dawned on her. Be careful what you ask for again and again!

Campaign provides access to affordable, quality behavioral health services

The Helen Ross McNabb Foundation is proud to announce a $3 million fundraising campaign to increase access to quality mental health care in East Tennessee.

Community leaders Dale Keasling, Home Federal Bank chairman, president and CEO, and Richard Maples, East Tennessee business leader, are spearheading the campaign and have raised more than $2.8 million to date.

Approximately 25,000 children and adults depend on the Helen Ross McNabb Center to be there for their mental health and substance abuse treatment needs. "Without the Helen Ross McNabb Center, many individuals would have no other place to turn to for care. The funds secured through the Access to Care campaign will ensure that the Center will continue to be a resource that our community turns to for many years to come," states Dale Keasling.

The Helen Ross McNabb Foundation is raising $3 million to offset the cost of hiring quality clinical staff, including psychiatrists and nurse practitioners and to make needed renovations to facilities acquired after the Center's merger with Child and Family Tennessee.

A common barrier to receiving quality care for individuals in our community who need it the most is cost. The Helen Ross McNabb Center believes that every person, regardless of his or her financial circumstances, should have access to quality behavioral health care and to safe, well-maintained facilities.

"As an East Tennessean, a businessman and a father, I want my community to be as healthy as it can be. It is our duty to make sure that our family, friends and neighbors receive the best care possible and this campaign will help make this happen," shares campaign co-chair, Richard Maples.

The Helen Ross McNabb Center provides comprehensive services to help individuals manage their mental illnesses and substance abuse issues so they can achieve health and success in their community. Between 70 percent and 90 percent of individuals with mental health problems have significant reduction of symptoms and improved quality of life with a combination of therapy, medical help, and continued support (mentalhealth.gov.) The Center relies on a professional staff of psychiatrists, nurses, clinicians, therapists, and case managers to provide expert, individualized care.

With a national shortage of psychiatrists, it is rare and fiscally challenging to provide specialized mental health services in rural and underserved areas. While access to psychiatrists continues to decrease, mental health problems remain common and costly in our community. Increasing access to affordable psychiatric care is vital to our community's health.

"Funds raised from the campaign will also help renovate identified facilities to meet the standards of quality

Focus on Others

A church that is living by the power of the gospel is one that is obsessed with reaching those who don't know Christ. The church is not just for insiders; it is for outsiders as well. Jesus came for the broken, the poor, the hurting, and the overlooked. What can happen over time to churches is that they become inward focused and forget those whom Christ came for. It is like a hospital that no longer accepts patients.

A young man came and asked Jesus of all the commands of the law, what was the most important one? Jesus replied: "Love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your mind

By Mark Brackney,
Minister of the Arlington Church of Christ

and with all your strength. The second is this: Love your neighbor as yourself" (Mark 12:30-31).

If you love God, then you will love people. And we are not just talking about loving people who love us. We are to also love those who quite frankly are difficult to love. Do you love those who don't know Christ? Churches that live out the gospel care for each other and for people who are far away from God. Unfortunately, too many churches only care about the sheep in the fold and not about the goats that are outside the church.

In Luke 15, we read about three parables that show how much God loves lost things (the sheep, the coin, and the son). What made the good shepherd leave the ninety-nine in the country and go after the lost one? Why would a woman celebrate with her friends after finding one lost silver coin out of ten? What made a father look for his lost son day after day until he came home? Love. And that is what drove Jesus to leave the comforts of heaven to come to earth and die.

Do you love lost people? Nobody wakes up one morning and says, "I don't care about the lost anymore." It is something that happens slowly over time. Many long time Christians realize that they no longer have any relationships with non-believers.

If that describes you, pray that God will increase your heart for those without Christ. God will answer that prayer. God will cause your prayer life to increase for the lost. You will notice your conversation shifting toward spiritual things. You will be aware that you are representing Christ at all times and your passion for Jesus will become contagious.

Do your part, let others do their part, and most of all let God do His part in sharing the gospel with others. Don't blame yourself if someone rejects Christ. That is putting you in the place of God. And on the flip side, don't take credit when someone accepts Jesus. The gospel is not about us. It is all about Jesus.

It is not about how many we have seen saved, but realizing how many more God wants to reach.

Larry Stamm of Larry Stamm Ministries

Larry Stamm presents 'Christ in the Passover'

The Passover has been observed for centuries. It was Jesus' last meal. What is it and how does it relate to Christians today? Larry Stamm of Larry Stamm Ministries will re-create the traditional Passover service and provide answers in a presentation called "Christ in the Passover" at Centerpointe Church on Sunday, March 22 at 10:45 a.m.

Larry Stamm will set a table with items traditionally used at the Passover meal and detail their spiritual significance. He will also explain the connection between the events of the first Passover in Egypt and the redemption that Jesus accomplished through his death and resurrection.

Stamm, whose father immigrated to the United States during the Holocaust, is the first and only Christian in his family. He was raised in a Reform Jewish home in Florida. It wasn't until he came to know Jesus in 1987 that his Jewish heritage found a deeper meaning within the context of a personal relationship with the God of Israel. Stamm founded Larry Stamm Ministries, a non-profit teaching ministry which aims to "make the Gospel of Jesus a confident topic of conversation for every Christian."

The CAC East Neighborhood Center, Project Grad, City of Knoxville, East Knoxville Business and Professionals Association, Keep Knoxville Beautiful, Knox County Health Department, and AmeriCorps have partnered with the coalition to help. Neighborhood groups involved include City View Sanders Center Association, Cold Springs

Neighborhood Watch, Delrose Neighborhood Association, Dandridge Avenue Community Association, Eastport/Lee Williams Neighborhood Watch, Michael Meadowview Neighborhood Association, Parkridge Community Organization, Parkridge Resident Association and Town Hall East Neighborhood Association.

Five Points Up hopes to improve the health of those living and working in the area by increasing the sense of community through local activities and events. According to the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, promoting meaningful community participation builds trust and relationships among neighbors, empowering them to become advocates for their communities. Neighborhood involvement helps communities mobilize to reach health-related goals and helps empower residents to change behaviors and improve health outcomes. In 2010, the Knox County Health Department received grant funding from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation to address environmental barriers to good health in three at-risk neighborhoods. KCHD is continuing this evidenced-based work in Five Points and other targeted neighborhoods by providing staff support and facilitation to neighborhood organizations.

Rosie's World

That Ghastly Potato Famine

originally transported in the holds of ships traveling from North America to England.

Its long story concerning this famine, too long to discuss here except to say that the British government's efforts to relieve the famine were inadequate. During this disabling course of history the population of Ireland dwindled by two million. One million died of starvation or diseases connected to the famine and one million emigrated to North America or England.

Most of us are of Irish descent, I know I am, and on March 17th we remember this tragic event that occurred in that beautiful "green" country. Also to commemorate St. Patrick, Ireland's faithful servant. We remember by parades, displaying shamrocks, and drinking "green" beer.

Let's turn to a more genial subject and celebrate this holiday with a delicious Irish recipe.

Chocolate Mint fudge
 Ingredients:
 2 c. semi-sweet chocolate chips (12 oz)
 1 -14 oz. can sweetened condensed milk
 2 tsp vanilla extract
 6 oz./ white candy coating
 2-3 tsp peppermint extract
 3 drops green food coloring
 Directions:
 In a heavy saucepan melt chocolate chips with 1 cup condensed milk. Remove from heat, stir in vanilla. Spread half into a waxed paper-lined 8" square pan. Chill 10 minutes or until firm.

Meanwhile in a heavy saucepan over low heat, cook and stir candy coating with remaining condensed milk until coating is melted and mixture is smooth.. Stir in peppermint extract and food coloring.. spread over bottom layer, chill ten minutes or until firm. Warm remaining chocolate mix if necessary, spread over mint layer.

Happy St. Patrick's Day to all! Thought for the day: It's not the honors and not the titles and not the power that is of ultimate importance. It's what resides inside. Fred Rogers

The potato famine in Ireland lasted from 1845-1852. In the 1800's Ireland was an agricultural nation populated by eight million persons who were among the poorest people in the Western world. Only about a quarter of the population could read or write. Life expectancy was short, forty years for the men.

The potato became a staple crop in the 1800's in the poorest regions. It was a vegetable rich in protein, carbohydrates, minerals, and vitamins. Irish peasants were actually healthier than peasants in Europe where bread was the staple food.

The famine began quite mysteriously in September 1845 as leaves on the potato suddenly turned black and curled, then rotted, seemingly the result of a fog that had wafted across the fields of Ireland. The cause was actually an airborne fungus

ETHS Offers Special Programs in Honor of National Medal of Honor Day

The East Tennessee Historical Society will host two special events, March 25-26, to commemorate Medal of Honor Day and Knoxville's hosting of the 2014 Medal of Honor.

Wednesday, March 25, Noon: Brown Bag Lecture: Medal of Honor Quilt Project with Kit Brown and Quilting Team

When local quilters learned that the 2014 Medal of Honor Convention would meet in Knoxville, their first thought was, "wouldn't it be great to meet these guys—and give them a quilt!" Over the 20 months leading up to the September 2014 convention, quilters across East Tennessee created individual quilts for each living recipient and several Gold Star families, for a total of 115 quilts. On Wednesday, March 25, join project coordinator Kit Brown and the team of quilters for a free Brown Bag lecture in which they will share their stories and memories from the quiltings and the conference.

The program is sponsored by the Harriet Z. Albers Memorial and is free and open to the public. The lecture will begin at noon at the East Tennessee History Center, 601 S. Gay Street, Knoxville. Guests are invited to bring a "Brown Bag" lunch and enjoy the lecture. Soft drinks will be available.

March 26, 7:00 p.m.: Documentary Film Premiere: Conspicuous Gallantry: The 2014 Medal of Honor Convention

On Thursday, March 26, the East Tennessee Historical Society is pleased to host the debut showing of the film Conspicuous Gallantry: The 2014 Medal of Honor Convention, a 45-minute documentary chronicling the convention held in Knoxville, September 2014, and including interviews with ten Medal of Honor recipients and numerous others involved with or attending the convention. The award-winning documentary was a service learning collaboration between the 2014 Medal of Honor Convention and the University of Tennessee School of Journalism and Electronic Media. Participating students and faculty will be present to offer insight into the once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to meet and interview Medal of Honor Recipients and to work with the convention.

The film showing is free and open to the public and will begin at 7:00 p.m. at the East Tennessee History Center, 601 S. Gay Street, Knoxville. For more information on the Medal of Honor Project and to view the film trailer, please visit medalofhonorproject.org.

March 25-26: Knoxville's 2014 Medal of Honor Convention Commemorative Quilt on Display at Museum of East Tennessee History

The Museum of East Tennessee History is honored to have been chosen as the permanent home for the 2014 Medal of Honor Quilt. This very special item was donated by the 2014 Medal of Honor Convention. The quilt is rich in symbolism, featuring the names of Tennessee's 32 Medal of Honor winners, plus another 12 born in the state but serving elsewhere, the mottos for each branch of service, Knoxville's Sunsphere, and a map with stitched outlines of all Tennessee counties, and more.

Roads and Rivers Day

Seymour's spring "Roads and Rivers Day" will be held on Saturday, March 21, from 9:00 a. m. until noon. Sevier County's Keep Sevier Beautiful organization sponsors this twice-a-year effort to remove litter from the area's roadways, river and stream banks, and public places. Since Seymour occupies portions of Sevier, Knox, and Blount counties, citizens from all parts of Seymour are urged to participate.

Registration will begin at 9:00 a. m. in the front parking lot of Seymour First Baptist Church, 11621 Chapman Highway. Volunteers will receive gloves, safety vests, litter pickers if wanted, and water. The wearing of long pants and sturdy shoes is encouraged.

The long, harsh winter has left Seymour's road and street sides with more than normal amounts of unsightly trash and litter. A good turnout on Saturday, March 21, will help alleviate this and make Seymour an even more attractive place in which to live and to visit.

Scout packs, 4-H Club members, church Sunday School classes and youth groups, civic clubs, families—all are welcomed. Children under age 12 will be paired with an adult.
