There were numerous ceremonies held over the Memorial Day weekend but few had the feeling of a community drawing together to honor their local veterans as did the event last Monday afternoon at Clapp's Chapel United Methodist Church in Corryton.

Knox County Commissioner Dave Wright, who is a member of the church there, served as master of ceremonies for the outdoor event. Local residents assembled behind the church and in front of the church cemetery as Wright spoke. The Gibbs High School Army ROTC and a group of Civil War reenactors honored the flag and later the reenactors presented a gun salute from

When the legislature passed a bill in 2011 making it more difficult for Tennessee teachers to get tenure, many people thought this was a good thing. After all, the previous year, Davis Guggenheim's pseudodocumentary "Waiting for Superman" popularized the false statement that "Tenure is automatic, and it means a job for life," leading to an allout assault on tenure by state legislatures across the country.

The bill, pushed by Governor Haslam, requires teachers to work five years, instead of three, to achieve tenure. It also created an evaluation procedure that can lead to revoking tenure based on poor job performance, and many teachers who will never attain tenure in spite of "Rock Solid 3s" on their evaluations.

In reality, KCEA President-elect Lauren Hopson told the Rude Awakening radio show last week, all tenure means is due process rights. "That means, if you are going to fire a teacher, you have to have cause, you have to be able to prove it, the teacher is allowed a hearing, and the opportunity for representation."

Last week, the news that a number of highly regarded (at least by parents and students) KCS teachers had been "nonrenewed" spread quickly Continue on page 4

Veterans' Home parking lot dedicated

Recently, Knox County Engineering crews completed work on a new addition to the parking lot at the Ben Atchley State Veterans' Home. Before the addition was constructed, visitors and staff often had to park on the facility's lawn because all of the paved spots were taken.

Tennessee Commissioner of Veterans Services Many-Bears Grinder, Assistant Tennessee Commissioner of Veterans Services Lorenza Wills, Tennessee State Veterans' Homes Executive Director Ed Harries and

Ben Atchley State Veterans' Home Administrator Doug Ottinger joined Knox County Mayor Tim Burchett in a brief dedication event and site visit at the facility last Thursday.

"With a number of elderly friends and relatives visiting veterans living in the Ben Atchley State Veterans' Home, it's important to have a safe place for them to park and walk into the building," said Knox County Mayor Tim Burchett. "I am happy that Knox County was able to get this work done for those served by this facility."

Local and state officials cut the ribbon at the Ben Atchley State Veterans' Home parking lot dedication last week.

Focus on the Law Contempt of Court

Courts operate with authority over the property of parties to a lawsuit and in some cases with authority over the person of the parties. The court can require that a person perform specific acts or refrain from taking specific actions. Without the power to enforce obedience to havior of any person in the presorders of the court, such orders would become ineffectual and the court system could not properly dispense justice to the parties before it. If a court makes a decision and orders that something be done, the violation of this order is called a contempt. "The power to punish for contempt is inherent in the courts of justice." Thigpen

If any of these contempts occur in the presence of the court, the court may verbally order that the offending party be arrested by the bailiff without process or notice and the offending party may be held without bail. The judge may proceed at once to fine, or imprison, or both the offending party. This type of contempt is a criminal contempt because it is to pre-

A Dollar General Store proposed for 3130 Circle Oaks Drive received approval for smaller parking spaces and a smaller parking lot during Wednesday's Knox County Board of Zoning and Appeals meeting. JMB Investments, LLC asked and received permission to downsize parking spaces from 200 square feet to 171 square feet or 9 by 19 feet and to reduce the number of spaces from 73 to 30.

Kerns Bakery, Bijou and others get city funding

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

The Kerns Bakery Building at 2110 Chapman Highway is one of the recipients of city funds to help restore and upkeep historic properties. The Kerns building will get $200,000 for renovation and redevelopment for mixed use.

The Kerns site was purchased in March by a group of developers and businesses headed by David Dewhirst for $650,000 with plans to renovate the interior for offices, retail space and an entertainment business.

The Historic Preservation Fund was created by Mayor Madeline Rogero with a commitment of $500,000 in the current 2014-2015 budget and another $500,000 for next year. The selection of applications came after evaluating twenty-four requests. Eight sites were selected.

Also selected for funding include: the Alfred Buffat Homestead, located at 1717 Love Creek Road, gets $21,529 for foundation and structural repair; The Bijou Theater, at 803 Gay Street, receives $49,475 for roof renovation; the Branson House, at 1423 Branson Avenue, gets $24,198 for a new dormer and windows above the front porch; Historic Westwood, at 3425 Kingston Pike, with $12,000 going for a second phase of window replacement, McMillan Flats, at 507 North Central Street, gets $150,000 for renovation of row houses returning to single family homes; and Park City Church, at 2204 Linden Avenue, gets $23,900 for roof and gutter replacement.

The funding also goes to the Planning Commission's Historic Resource Inventory, which receives $124,000 for an inventory update of historic buildings in the city.

The Clapp's Chapel Choir performed as the audience stood for the flag and then held a moment of silence in honor of fallen veterans.

Wright was followed by local people who read poems and letters from veterans. The participants included Gin Legg, Will Boggs, Ed Bardill, Ben Greenwell, Susan Hargis and Ceabe Davis.

Other citizens then read the names of the veterans buried in the church cemetery. The readers were Opie Legg, Donna Boggs, Angie Sharp, Dean Sharp, Dave Wright and Clayton Sharp. Sharp is a 93-yearold Air Force veteran with service in Australia and New Guinea. After each name, term of service and branch ans buried in the cemetery include soldiers of both the North and South.

Pastor Bill Akers led the closing prayer and everyone was invited into the fellowship hall to have refreshments, view the large display of military items and photos of local veterans who served, and to socialize.

Wright told The Focus about the history his family has with the church and said that the late Richard E. Wright, a distant relative, began the annual memorial event in 2007. Although Wright, a former U.S. Navy Chief Petty Officer, has passed away the church and the community continue to honor all veterans and, next year, they plan a 10th Anniversary.

Troubling TCAPS

News outlets across the state have been mute about this year's TCAPS results, but the blogosphere and social media have been on fire.

First, some definitions: a

Quick Score is a temporary score delivered after the tests have been administered, to give students and teachers a score that can be used for final grades. A Cut Score is a cut-off point – the points on a line or bell curve of test results dividing results into "advanced," "proficient," etc.

Equating test scores takes one test score and makes it comparable to another score. Additional factors are taken into consideration, such as the difficulty of each test, the number of questions, the kinds of questions, and other factors, to determine what a score on one of these tests would "equate" are tested (preequating) or equating).

Last equating process caused delays resulting in the quick scores not being received by the district in time to be included in students' final grades.

Apparently the TN DOE got that pesky postequating problem resolved, because the quick scores were received on time this year. And at first glance, the scores are fantastic! Which is worrisome.

Momma Bear's blog reported, "Teachers are skeptical that students improved so dramatically. People are wondering if the scores were inflated to make parents happy, and worry the artificially inflated scores will penalize them in their evaluations in future years using the to on another test. Scores secret mathematical

This initial euphoria after the test was quickly extinguished is given (post- when the index cut score information came out year, last week. You see, our the TCAP post- kids did so awesome that the state had to raise the bar. In 2014, students who scored 85 or above were determined to be "proficient," but this year, the necessary quick score for "proficient" ranged from 89 to 91.

> The TN DOE uses postequated scores, which means that after the tests are given, they can set the cut scores wherever they want. In other words, even though the quick scores show that most students mastered the material, the TN DOE can go back and make adjustments to get the proficiency results they want.

> Additionally, the state changed its methodology for calculating quick scores for students in grades 3-8. It is now using the cubed-root method the state has been

This change in methodology resulted in apparent grade inflation, leading parents and educators to believe students had performed better than in previous years, and resulted in a 4 to 6-point increase in cut scores from 2014.

Blogger Thomas Weber (Dad Gone Wild) wrote, "Clearly, this isn't like Ms. Johnson's 5th grade class where there were 50 questions and each one you got right earned you two points, and if you got between 80 and 90 points you got a "B," 90 to 100 an "A," and so on. Under the state scenario, a student receives a score, for example, 87, and whatever number the cut score is set at determines whether the student is proficient or advanced. If the cut score is set at 88, the child would be considered basic. If the cut score is 86, they are proficient."

But standardized tests are inherently flawed. Jersey Jazzman, an education researcher and blogger, explains that both the below average schools and standards and the tests are teachers. Or, as the reform created to yield "normal" or bell curve distributions.

applied to the test results, some students will fall to the exceptional end of the scale and some students will fall to the other side, but the majority will fall in the middle. Weber explains, "While we are demanding that students do exceptional work, we are utilizing a measurement system that guarantees the majority of them will do average work. Because if too many of them do exceptional work, we'll just make the test harder so that the majority fall back in the middle."

"In He continues, Tennessee, we have the Achievement School District, which has the mission of taking the bottom 5% of schools up to the top 25% while ignoring the fact that there will always be a bottom 5%. The use of a bell curve goes one step further and insures there will always be movement likes to label them, failing schools and When the bell curve is failing teachers. How many parents and community members are aware of this, and how many take the results at face value?"

> And, Weber points out that students are not alone in being held to a higher standard in a system that only allows for a few "above average" students. He says, "Countless articles have been written about the need to have a great teacher in front of every class, yet each of those teachers will only be allowed to produce average outcomes. Because again, if all those teachers produced great outcomes, we'd have to redo the test to make sure those outcomes were average."

> Are you starting to understand why students and parents across the country are refusing to be part of this ruse, by refusing the test? When will you join them?

PAGE A4 The Knoxville FOCUS June 1, 2015 History of Johnson University to be discussed

SEYMOUR - More than 120 years ago, Ashley Johnson, a teacher, evangelist and author, founded the School of Evangelists. In 1909, the school was renamed Johnson Bible College. Recently, its name changed again to Johnson University.

Dr. Thomas "Tommy" Smith, the university's vice president for academic affairs, will explain the history and growth of the South Knoxville school at 7 p.m. Tuesday, June 16 at Seymour Public Library. He will illustrate his talk with historic photos.

Johnson's vision in his own words was that the school should be "open day and night to the poor young man who desires above every other desire, to preach the Gospel of Christ." Founded in 1893, the present Johnson University retains its rural South Knoxville campus, a campus in Florida and offers courses on-line. It has kept its focus on producing Christian community leaders while keeping tuition costs low.

Dr. Smith has seen many changes first-hand. "I just finished my 26th year working there," he said. He was a history professor before taking on his present position. The deans of eight academic schools within the university all report to him. "I'm the guy who gets blamed for everything," he joked.

After earning a Bachelor of Arts degree from Johnson Bible College and a Master's from Emmanuel Christian Seminary in Johnson City, Tenn., Dr. Smith obtained a Ph. D. from the University of Tennessee. He taught at UT for four years before moving full-time to Johnson Bible College in 1991.

Dr. Smith's talk is sponsored by Friends of Seymour Library as part of its "How We Live: Then and Now" series of programs that explore the people and culture of East Tennessee. The library is at 137 West Macon Lane in Seymour. Admission is free and everyone is welcome. For more information, call the library at 865-573-0728.

a superintendent could accept grant money if it was less than $50,000. Current law director Richard (Bud) Armstrong told the meeting the school board needed to rectify a mistake and advised the commission to "pass this on to help the school board deal with the issues they have."

Armstrong said that there's no record of a former law director ever reviewing the acceptance of a grant by the superintendent and said the only legal opinion that matters is the current one.

"I'm not going to discuss it anymore," he said.

Northwest Sector Plan goes back to MPC

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

Although the Knox County Commission followed the city's lead in adopting new parking lot regulations to downsize parking space widths, the commission would not accept the Northwest Sector Plan the city has adopted.

The Northwest Plan and General Plan 2033 was designed by the Metropolitan Planning Commission and presented to both jurisdictions. The city, after being requested by some citizens to remove all references to PlanET from the document, opted to seek a compromise and added a statement disavowing any connection with the regional recommendations with PlanET but left the term in other parts of the resolution.

The county commission bowed to the request of a few citizens Tuesday afternoon and voted to send the plan back to the MPC and have the planners remove all references to PlanET. Only Commissioner Sam McKenzie opposed the motion.

Commissioner John Schoonmaker was critical of the MPC for including illustrations of places not in Knox County in the sector plan and asked the planners to include local photos and artwork in other sector plans that will come before the commission. The plan includes the areas of Papermill, Middlebrook, Lonas, Weisgarber, Vanosdale, Western Avenue, Merchants, Schaad, Clinton Highway and Callahan.

PlanET is a multi-year study of future growth in several counties surrounding Knox County and has been used as a guideline for growth by various counties and groups, including the MPC. Some opponents see PlanET as a conspiracy to adopt United Nation plans worldwide. Because PlanET often refers to "sustainable growth," a term used in the UN's 1992 action plan Agenda 21, some fear that referring to PlanET would be adhering to a one-world-order concept.

City Council's Tuesday meeting moved to successfully adopt the Northwest Sector Plan including many references in the plans to PlanET. Opponents were present during the council meeting but didn't address the issue. The final reading of the sector plan passed unanimously without discussion.

So it appears that the county and the city will have a long-range plan for the Northwest Sector with slightly different verbiage: one with references to PlanET and one with no mention of PlanET at all.

across social media. One in particular was Kindergarten teacher Christina Graham, who some parents and colleagues worried, was targeted for non-renewal because of a speech she made during public forum at a BOE meeting.

In April 2014, Graham spoke out against the SAT-10 standardized assessment that was given to KCS students in grades K-2. This was not a state required assessment, and it has since been discontinued in Knox County.

But Graham may never know the reasons her contract was not renewed - as a third year teacher, she did not have tenure and she was told by HR that her principal acted within policy by terminating her without having to give a reason. No due process for teachers without tenure.

To those on the outside, Graham did everything right. She was a "rock solid 3" – having attained evaluation scores of 3 or more for each of her three years of teaching.

On the professionalism rubric, she has been recognized as a "Promoter" for the past two years. A promoter is defined as "a model teacher leader who but she (and several SPEAK renewal list. The district asked, "What can we do?" promotes and delivers high quality, time intensive support to the school community and beyond, primarily focused on student growth as well as professional development and growth." Last summer, after hearing Dyslexia advocate Jennifer Nagle speak at several BOE meetings, Graham took an online class through the Dyslexia Training Institute to help her recognize the one in five students in her class who may have some form of Dyslexia. Also last summer she and several other KCS teachers baked brownies and treats, and gathered at West Town Mall at midnight to welcome the KCS TSA teams home from their national competition in Washington D.C.

Graham spent a few days of her Spring Break this year in Nashville with fellow educators, meeting with legislators to voice their opposition to vouchers (note that the KCS Board of Education passed a resolution this year against vouchers).

She participated in a community clean-up in conjunction with KCEA and Keep Knoxville Beautiful at Fulton High School this spring. Fulton is not her school, or even her district, members) gave up a Saturday to support the teachers, parents, and students in the Fulton community.

She worked hard to get her Donors Choose project funded for her classroom. And now she worries she's going to have to decline it. Meanwhile she is completing training to become a big sister through the Big Brothers, Big Sisters organization.

Was she targeted? We may never know, and worse, she may never know. Local TV station WATE picked up on the story, which soon spread to the Blaze.com and an invitation for Graham to appear on Fox News.

Graham is only one of many KCS teachers who were non-renewed. Dr. Kathy Sims, KCS Chief Human Resources Officer, told WATE that so far there are 33 teachers on the nonhas until June 15 to notify teachers if their contract will be renewed for next year. Last year, 55 teachers were non-renewed.

Sims also told WATE, "You can non-renew an employee for any reason or no reason, as long as it's not an illegal reason." But, how does someone know if the reason is legal or illegal, if they aren't given a reason?

Teachers who were not renewed can apply for another teaching job in Knox County, as can teachers who were "riffed," a term referring to "reduction in force" (a legal way to fire a teacher with tenure). For example, at Cedar Bluff Middle School, a STEM teacher, a Phys Ed teacher, and an AVID teacher were informed their positions had been eliminated.

Our Neighborhoods The Tale of Two Towers

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

Suppose you live in a nice neighborhood and you learn a cell tower is being planned there, right smack in the middle of homes and on a high point where it would be very visible. What would you do?

It's a continuing problem for neighborhoods as more and more cell phones are in use and more and more companies compete to provide service.

Such is the dilemma now facing two Knox County neighborhoods. Although they are across town from each other, both share concerns about how a cell phone tower would affect property values, traffic and the general appearance of their neighborhoods.

The neighborhoods of Lakemoor Hills and, across town, Martha Berry are both facing proposed cell towers in the midst of homes there.

A third neighborhood, Sequoyah Hills, is concerned about the proposed Lakemoor tower because it would be directly across the lake from their homes and very visible.

Lakemoor Hills

Lakemoor Hills has been called "Sequoyah South" because the upscale neighborhood faces Sequoyah Hills and the Cherokee Country Club just across the lake. The neighborhood sits on a peninsula that you reach from Alcoa Highway by either Mont Lake Drive or Maloney Road and residents there like the location. Part of that area is in the city and part is in the county.

"We call it the quiet side of the river," said John Haynes, secretary of the Lakemoor Home Owners Association. He's one of the founders of the association and one of the opponents to a cell tower proposed there. The association's president is Dick Graf, vice-president is Rosanne Wilkerson, and Bill Stoess is treasurer.

The well organized group has various committees to oversee beautification, security, health, KUB and an Alcoa Highway Committee.

Support is growing against the 190-foot T-Mobile tower and recently members of the Lakemoor and Sequoyah Hills neighborhoods met with an attorney for the cell tower company. The tower would be unlit and the company is proposing a "balloon test" there so residents can see the height of the tower.

"They don't really need it (the tower)" Haynes said, adding, "We're strictly residential."

Opponents at Lakemoor Hills stress that the tower's possible location intrudes on three historic sites: Speedwell Manor, Sequoyah Hills Park and Cherokee Boulevard, and Lyon's View Pike District.

"We've got some pointed questions," Haynes said, adding that the tower request at the planning commission has already been delayed twice. Currently it looks as if the tower request goes to the planning commission in July.

Lakemoor Hills residents love the scenery and lake frontage there and sacrifice convenient shopping and eating locations to live there. They don't mind the drive out of the neighborhood onto Alcoa Highway and "It is obvious the overwhelming sentiment of the neighbors is against the tower," Haynes.

The neighborhood association meets at the Lake Hills Presbyterian Church and the area is on the Dogwood Trail. You can contact the neighborhood at "Lakemoorhillshoa.org" or "No Cell Tower in Lakemoor Hills" on Facebook.

Martha Berry

Across town the residents of the Martha Berry and Ridgecrest neighborhoods are facing the placement of a 150-foot monopole telecommunications tower at 2119 Ridgecrest Drive, south of Martha Berry Drive and east of Hollyhock Lane, in close proximity of many homes there.

Also on the Dogwood Trail the neighborhood is located atop the ridge northwest of Gresham Middle School. In the valley to the north are Rifle Range Road and Dry Gap Road. Carrera Romanini has a petition against the tower and Ron Gordon is involved in the opposition to the structure.

"We live in a beautiful and established area," the online petition reads "A cell phone tower will mar the beauty and character of the neighborhood and decrease its desirability for residents and homebuyers alike."

Many elder residents in the neighborhood live on fixed incomes and opponents of the towers are concerned about a decrease in property values. Homes to the north of Martha Berry are among the highest elevation in the city and have fantastic views. The proposed tower is only 168 feet from the nearest property. Opponents say the tower would increase commercial traffic there on what now only carries light residential traffic and would be a threat to wildlife through the destruction of trees and ground disturbance. Gordon recently posted lots of information on the internet about possible explosion of towers, the health hazards, and information about what other jurisdictions and neighborhoods have done to stop the construction of towers.

The question may go before the Metropolitan Planning Commission on June 11 after being postponed once and residents are being urged to voice their opposition by attending the meeting or by contacting the planning commission.

The builder, Branch Towers, proposes an 8-foot security fence on the 5.7-acre site and the tower would initially have four telecommunication antennas. A 16-foot wide paved road would be built to access the tower. If approved by the planning commission for the R-1 (Residential) neighborhood the matter would then go before City Council for approval or denial. The Top of the Ridge Neighborhood Watch is involved with the effort to stop the tower. Suzanne Matheny of 1710 Ridgecrest is the contact for the group. You can also find the neighborhood on Facebook and sign the petition.

The view across the water from Lakemoor Hills sees the Sequoyah Hills and Lyon's View area. Those neighborhoods could soon be looking across and seeing a 190-foot cell tower proposed for their neighbors to the south.

PAGE B2 The Knoxville FOCUS June 1, 2015 Sixty-day delay too late to save Christenberry House

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

On the same day that the Knoxville City Council passed a 60-day waiting period on the demolition of historic homes, the Christenberry House on Kingston Pike was demolished. Just hours before the 7 p.m. council meeting wrecking crews destroyed the historic home.

Kim Trent, Executive Director of Knox Heritage, spoke to the council prior to the demolition delay vote.

"Today for me it shows why this is important to the city," she said and called the demolition a "permanent act to solve a temporary problem."

The 60-day waiting period might have given the city, Knox Heritage and other groups time to organize more and possibly save the home or make arrangements to salvage building materials. The new ordinance does not, however, prevent owners of historic properties from demolishing structures if they wish; property owners are not even required to work with preservation efforts. After the waiting period a demolition permit would be issued.

Owners of the home and the almost five acres of lakefront property reportedly said the structure was beyond repair and plan to build a new home there. The Christenberry House was on the recent "Fragile Fifteen" list of endangered houses issued annually by Knox Heritage.

The Howard House on Broadway would fall under the new regulation. A Walmart Neighborhood Market is proposed for the site along with the site of the Centerpointe Church next door but a rezoning request has not been filed yet for those sites.

In other action the city council voted to pass Mayor Madeline Rogero's annual budget, to fund the city departments and to set the "no tax increase" rate. Councilman Nick Della Volpe jokingly asked the mayor not to spend the entire budget. She replied that Della Volpe could tell her which project in his district should be cut.

United Way President Ben Landers informed the council that the 211 Helpline will now be a partner with CAC's 311 center. He said the Community Action Committee will handle the 211 calls and provide information to callers about various local services such as shelter, food, housing, and medical care, etc. Landers said the United Way and other agencies began the local 211 service 20 years ago and the service has been privately funded.

He praised Knoxville's 311 helpline as "one of the best in the nation" and said the contract is for one year.

The council also voted to fund the Office of Neighborhood's Neighborhood Grants that were announced last week. Twelve city neighborhoods received funds for local projects.

The application for a $24 million grant from the U.S. Department of Transportation for possible construction of a pedestrian and bicycle bridge from south of the river to the University of Tennessee campus was authorized. The city would match with $6 million in funding. The project has been discussed for many years and is contingent on federal funding.

"If UT isn't a player I don't think we'll come up with the money," Councilman Nick Della Volpe said. The span would mainly serve UT student housing on the south side and offer access directly onto the campus.

Dawn Michelle Foster, Deputy Director of the Office of Redevelopment, said the bridge is "a great project to move forward with."

The council also voted to recognize the late Mayor Kyle Testerman by naming a tennis complex in his honor. Members of the Testerman family were present and said that Testerman learned of the honor prior to passing and was delighted with the honor. Testerman was a founder of the Knoxville Racket Club, a business leader, an attorney, and in 1972 became Knoxville's youngest mayor.

Knoxville became a "Purple City" in a council vote and one of the first in the nation to begin a program to inform people how to deal with fellow citizens with dementia.

The council also authorized the Knoxville Area Transit to purchase fourteen "low-floor cutaway buses" over the next five years, allocating $629,940 for the first year for the purchase of five buses.

They also authorized a tax break for the White Lily partners for property on North Central and East Depot Streets, purchased sidewalk easements at 514 West Jackson Avenue, and accepted the donation by the Tennessee Air National Guard for the donation of two gas ID meters for the fire department.

TPO supports city's pedestrian bridge application

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

A grant request from Knoxville to the U.S. Department of Transportation to fund a pedestrian and bicycle bridge connecting South Knoxville to the UT campus received support Wednesday from the Regional Transportation Planning Organization (TPO). The request, for $24 million, was addressed by Dawn Michelle Foster, Deputy Director of the city's Office of Redevelopment.

Foster told the TPO executive committee that the 1,700 foot bridge would reach from bank to bank and that the "clearance has already been approved" along with mentioning the letters of support from the University and Congressman John Duncan.

If a grant is received for less money Foster said the city's match would need to be tweaked. Currently the city's match would be $6 million.

An additional member will soon be joining the Knoxville TPO, according to TPO Director Jeff Welch. He reminded the group that the state house and senate voted to add one new voting member to the Knoxville and Nashville regional groups and that the new member will be chosen from the Tennessee County Highway Officers Association.

The group voted to move some funds around for various projects including dropping a plan for Fort Sanders sidewalks and using that money toward sidewalk projects near Austin-East High School.

Sara Martin, Outreach Coordinator, spoke to the organization about Smart Trips and a gift card program for people who take part in an internet effort to cut down on car use through mass transit, biking or walking. She also spoke of the TPO's search for additional Park and Ride lots in the region. # James B. Frazier, Jr.

Pages from the Past

By Ray Hill rayhill865@gmail.com

James Beriah Frazier, Jr. came from one of Tennessee's most distinguished families; young Jim was the son and namesake of a former governor and United States senator.

Born June 23, 1890 in Chattanooga, Tennessee, J. B. Frazier, Jr. went through the public schools before attending the Baylor School in his home city. Young Jim Frazier then went off to Charlottesville to attend the University of Virginia. After completing his course work at the University of Virginia, Frazier then enrolled in the Chattanooga College of Law, graduating in 1914 when he was twenty-four years old.

Jim Frazier interrupted his life and law practice to volunteer for service when the United States entered World War I. Frazier was discharged from the Army with the rank of Major and returned to his home and law practice in March of 1919. Young Jim was fortunate to be able to practice law with his father, who remained one of Tennessee's most distinguished citizens. The former governor was still very much in demand as a speaker at various events all across the state.

Frazier's entry into politics came through the revival of the national Democratic Party in 1932 when New York Governor Franklin Delano Roosevelt defeated incumbent President Herbert Hoover. The most influential politicians in Tennessee, including Senator Kenneth D. McKellar, Senator Cordell Hull, and Congressman E. H. Crump, leader of the Shelby County political machine, had all backed Roosevelt prior to his nomination. Roosevelt selected Senator Hull to serve as Secretary of State, a position he held longer than any other individual in history. With the arrival of Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal, McKellar was in an ideal situation to make recommendations and it fell to the senior senator to control most of the appointments and patronage in the State of Tennessee. Naturally, the Republican appointees who had served under President Hoover's administration were expected to be replaced and one of Senator McKellar's recommendations was James B. Frazier, Jr. to serve as United States Attorney for the Eastern District of Tennessee. McKellar had known Jim Frazier for most of his life, as the senator was friends with the young man's father. McKellar was also a great admirer of Jim Frazier's mother, Louise Keith Frazier. Toward the end of September 1933, Frazier's nomination had been confirmed by the United States Senate and he would remain in office until his resignation on April 12, 1948.

The newly appointed U. S. Attorneys in Tennessee all had ties to Senator McKellar; William McClanahan, U.S. Attorney for the Western District of Tennessee, had briefly worked in McKellar's Washington office and served as his secretary. McKellar would frequently visit the McClanahan home in Memphis whenever he was back in Tennessee and it was not unusual for the senator to join the family for dinner. The youngest McClanahan daughter, Millie, recalls her mother using an old pair of the senator's white trousers for a sewing project.

Not only was the appointment a comfortable one with a good salary, it afforded young Jim Frazier a political post that would give him a higher profile in the community.

Frazier had to be reappointed every four years and when the time came for him to be appointed yet again, the future Congressman got caught up in Tennessee politics. Senator Nathan L. Bachman had died on April 23, 1937 and Governor Gordon Browning had appointed George L. Berry to serve until a special election could be held in 1938. Initially, Berry believed he had an agreement with Senator McKellar to divide the patronage and appointments, giving Senator Berry control over those appointments made in East Tennessee. K. D. McKellar was highly popular in East Tennessee and the senator was likely congenitally unable to share such appointments. McKellar was not especially fond of his new colleague and it was not long before an alarmed Jim Frazier notified the senator Berry did not seem to be for his reappointment. Unfortunately for Berry, he had written Frazier previously to indicate he was for Frazier's continued service as U.S. Attorney for Tennessee's Eastern District. McKellar advised Frazier to forward a certified copy of Senator Berry's letter to his Washington office. The wily McKellar quickly and effectively outmaneuvered Senator Berry, who merely accomplished irritating the Frazier family and the family's many friends in Hamilton County. Senator McKellar brought Frazier's nomination out of the Senate's Judiciary Committee where it had briefly languished and won a quick confirmation before the full Senate. Berry was defeated in his bid to win election to the Senate seat to which he had been appointed following a ferocious fight amongst Tennessee Democrats. Senator

McKellar and Ed Crump of but would instead seek Memphis joined to elimielection to the United nate both Governor Gordon States Senate, Jim Frazier Browning and Senator resigned his federal office George Berry politically to become a candidate. Jim Frazier faced two seriand they were successful. Another death briefly tempted Jim Frazier into resigning his office and becoming a candidate for office. Sam D. McReynolds had been the Congressman from Tennessee's Third Congressional District since 1923; McReynolds had just been reelected to another two-year term in 1938, but his heart was giving out and he died on July 11, 1939. There would be a special election to determine McReynolds's successor and there was considerable speculation Jim Frazier would enter the race. Frazier would certainly have been a strong candidate and it is interesting to contemplate just how different Tennessee's political history would be had he run and won. Frazier's hesitation likely had less to do with political concerns than personal matters. Jim Frazier had married late in life and had in fact just married Elizabeth Hope on March 30, 1939 when he was months shy of his forty-ninth birthday. Their union would soon produce their only child, a daughter named for her mother, Elizabeth Hope Frazier. Jim Frazier announced he would not be a candidate for Congress, preferring instead to remain in office as U. S. Attorney for the East Tennessee District. In all, Jim Frazier was appointed U.S. Attorney four times before his resignation in 1948. As it turned out, Frazier's entry into Congress was merely delayed. When Estes Kefauver announced he would not seek reelection to Congress in 1948, for Wilkes Thrasher, Jr. The Republicans had not won a Congressional election in the Third District since 1920, but the GOP had nominated a savvy thirty-one year old businessman, William E. Brock, III. The grandson and namesake of a Democratic U. S. senator, Brock proved to be a masterful organizer and he and the Young Republicans of his district organized right down to the precinct level and surprised virtually everybody when he won the general election. Many of Congressman Jim Frazier's strongest supporters never reconciled themselves to supporting Wilkes Thrasher, Jr. and voted for Brock. It was a turning point in Tennessee politics and foreshadowed the revival of the two-party system in the Volunteer State. Congressman Frazier's loss was naturally a blow, but as it turned out, his defeat likely saved his life as he was suffering from cancer and didn't know it. Frazier was successfully treated and returned home to Chattanooga and retirement. Surviving cancer, former Congressman J. B. Frazier, Jr. lived in his Chattanooga home for a number of years, finally succumbing to old age on October 30, 1978 at age eighty-eight.

carried every county in the district.

Congressman James B. Frazier would turn seventy-two before the primary election and faced the most serious challenge of his career when Wilkes Thrasher, Jr. announced his candidacy. Thrasher came from a highly prominent family and was the son of a former Hamilton County judge. Young and handsome, Wilkes Thrasher, Jr. seemed to be the embodiment of the new age of "Camelot" under the administration of America's new president, John F. Kennedy. Congressman Frazier had incurred the wrath of some Kennedy administration officials as he had voted against the president's Medicare proposal as a member of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee. Frazier was a more traditional and conservative Democrat and Wilkes Thrasher challenged the Congressman from the left. Thrasher campaigned for federal aid to education and ran as an all-out supporter of the Kennedy administration. Tennessee's senators, Estes Kefauver and Albert Gore, were both considerably more liberal than Jim Frazier and the Thrasher campaign received quiet support from the senators.

J. B. Frazier, Jr. began a twelve year Congressional career when he was fiftyeight years old. Frazier was a stately-looking man and as he aged, his hair turned silver, giving him the classic appearance of a Congressman. Friendly, engaging, and diligently looking after the interests of his constituents, Jim Frazier remained popular inside his district.

Assigned to the House Judiciary Committee, Congressman Frazier tended to the traditional duties of his office and was regularly reelected to office every two years. Frazier was challenged by one Fred Hixson in the 1950 Democratic primary, but again demonstrated his strength and personal popularity by carrying every county in his Congressional district. Opposition to Congressman Frazier began to dwindle. He finally faced another serious opponent in the 1960 primary in the person of Cooper Holt. Once again, Congressman Frazier

Frazier was immediately put on the defensive and was at a serious disadvantage, as he was oddly fatigued during the campaign.

The primary election was remarkably close; Frazier lost by 269 votes. For the first time, Jim Frazier had lost his native Hamilton County.

We also managed to bake ourselves on vacations. A week in the mountains each year did the trick. As soon as we'd finish breakfast, it was off to the river. There we stayed all day and swam, dove, and played. By the end of the first day, shoulders and legs sizzled. Our first trip to the beach came when Jim and I were ten. Cousin Charlie's family

Cedric Washington didn't break Reggie Cobb's 30-year-old Central High School track record in the 200-meter dash this spring, but the mere fact he was closing in on it is meaningful. "My fastest time is 22.51 and the record is a 22.45, which means I'm like not even a half of a step away," noted Washington in March.

The Knoxville Force and Lady Force soccer teams recently opened their 2015 seasons at a new home with a new fan club --- The Scruffy City Syndicate.

Knoxville's two semi-pro soccer teams moved to the new Emerald Youth Sansom Family Sports Complex, which recently opened on Dale Ave. The Emerald Youth Foundation now owns the two teams, which played their first few seasons at the University of Tennessee's Regal Soccer Stadium.

Now that the teams have a new home, they have some die-hard fans.

"This is our first year and I'm the leader of the Scruffy City Syndicate," said Ben Winder, who works as a youth minister at Knoxville's First Baptist Church. "I love to follow Knoxville's local sports teams.

"I go to the Smokies games and I watch the Ice Bears but I especially love soccer and the Knoxville Force. Soccer is my favorite sport."

Members of the Scruffy City Syndicate are die-hard soccer fanatics, though the game is relatively new to most, including Derek Green, who is a lawyer from Athens, Tennessee.

Members of the Knoxville Force Fan Club, the Scruffy City Syndicate, cheer on Knoxville's semi-pro soccer club at a game Thursday night. The Force lost 2-1 to New Orleans.

Athletic directors from 28 schools were requested to send in their respective school's Female and Male Student-Athletes of the Year, and based on that information, The Focus will be featuring the honorees in upcoming issues.

Green, who is an avid University of Kentucky sports fan, may be new to the sport, but he's wasted little time finding his niche at Force matches.

"I saw my first soccer game [when both teams opened their respective 2015 home campaigns on May, 23]. "Ben's brother is a partner at my law firm and I'm here to support the Force," Green said. "I'm a big sports fan. My family is from Kentucky, so I'm a Wildcat but I love the [Nashville] Predators and the Titans.

Members of the Scruffy City Syndicate add to the soccer atmosphere with cheers and songs throughout Knoxville Force matches.

By Ken Lay

MURFREESBORO --- Catholic High School catcher Kole Cottam culminated his stellar high school career recently by winning Tennessee's Class AA Mr. Baseball award.

Cottam, who will continue his baseball career at the University of Kentucky next season, received the award prior to leading the Irish (30-15) to a second consecutive appearance in the Class AA State Championship Game.

Catholic, which lost to District 4-AA rival Christian Academy of Knoxville in 2014, felt heartbreak again when it dropped a byterian Academy on May 22. The Irish lost 6-5 to the Warriors last season.

The loss to the Lions stung Cottam, who gunned down three CPA runners on the base paths in the 2015 title game but he'll long remember his days at Catholic.

"We're truly a team," Cottam said after the Irish's season-ending loss. "We bought in and this is the best group of kids that I've ever played with."

The Jesters withstood a pair of surges from the Force to hang on to claim their first win of the young season.

New Orleans took a 1-0 lead when Tony Judice scored when Force goalkeeper Jonathan Shaw slipped in the net in the 51st minute. Ryan Reid picked up an assist on the first marker of the match.

"Ryan Reid beat his man and gave me a great ball," Judice said. "On the second goal, Keir Hannity gave me another great ball."

Force coach Paulo Neto was pleased with Knoxville's effort despite the fact that the Force came up on the short end.

"We had some good opportunities tonight," Neto said. "We played really well. We want to get results but we also want to develop players in Knoxville and give

He put those words into practice this year, and the regular season schedule the Rams went up against was a big factor in Grace Christian winning the state championship.

The only Class A teams GCA played were in its district or in the post-season tournament.

By Steve Williams

John Wright sees the game of football from the standpoint there are three teams on the field - the two teams that consist of players and a third team that officiates the contest.

It is the latter team that Wright and fellow Southeastern Conference official Johnny Hibbett, who are both from Knoxville, had in mind when they started "the thought process" of having an East Tennessee Football Officials Clinic in Knoxville a few years ago.

"Both of us have a lot of friends who are officials in the SEC," said Wright, "so last year we said we're going to do it and see what happens."

The 2014 clinic was attended by 32 officials, said Wright. This year's clinic, held May 9 at Central High School, had 45 officials. "Our goal is to increase it year by year."

Tom Ritter, one of the top referees in the SEC, was added to this year's clinic staff, which also included Atlantic Coast Conference referee Jeff Flanagan, SEC umpire Russ Pulley and Terry Brown, a National Football League Field Judge who also is a supervisor in the Knoxville Football Officials Association, which is made up of approximately 100 local high school officials.

"We just want to give back," said Wright. "These clinics go on throughout the country. We have probably a dozen college offi-

Howard Russell, KFOA supervisor, was an observer at the clinic.

"I wish they all were here," said Russell, referring to KFOA members. "Officiating is a learning process. A clinic like this would help the older officials as well as the younger ones.

"If you want to move up to the varsity level in high school or move up from varsity to college ball, the more clinics you can involve yourself with, the more that can be gained in the learning process."

Russell said the East Tennessee clinic should especially be attractive to KFOA officials since it's held in Knoxville.

Ritter, who came in from Nashville for the clinic, will be going into his 15th season in the SEC. He said he gets a "couple of things" from working clinics.

"We always learn something no matter how long we've been around, and no matter who we're around," said Ritter. "If we're around people talking football, we will learn something.

"I pick up some things from people who come to the clinic – both the other clinicians and some of the attendees - and it's also a way of giving back."

Ritter officiated high school football in Texas and about 12 years in Nashville.

"We've all stood in their shoes and tried to come up through the ranks and improve," said Ritter. "We remember those days very clearly. We want to help these guys as much as we can."

KFOA members Paul Romero and Mike Wallace both said the clinic provided a great "opportunity" to learn.

"I'm thankful that we have veteran officials like Johnny Hibbett and John Wright to be able to come out here and do this for us," said Wallace. "It gives us the opportunity to learn new techniques and mechanics as well as advance and share some experiences with other officials. We appreciate that."

Romero added, "Hearing some of the experiences they (the clinicians) have had and some of the regrets, it really goes to show that we all go through the same learning process and a lot of the same experiences."

One lesson Wallace took from the clinic was the emphasis put on using officiating fundamentals, "even for pee wee ball to NFL. The fundamentals of officiating should never go away."

Proceeds from the clinic, after expenses for lunch and T-shirts, go to the KFOA Scholarship Fund. A $500 donation was made after the 2014 clinic, said Wright.

The Problems with Youth Sports I watch as coaches only give encour-

By Alex Norman

Let me start this article by saying that there are a lot of great things about youth sports.

It gives kids an opportunity to get some exercise. It teaches them to work with others. And playing sports is all sorts of fun.

The only thing wrong with youth sports is what adults are doing to it.

Over the past year my kids have played in a local youth sports league. This is my first experience with youth sports since I played soccer as a kid, so I didn't know what to expect. What I learned is that the same "win at all costs" mentality that you see in college and professional athletics has made its way to the levels of sports in which the participants haven't even reached double digits in age.

It isn't important that I tell you which league, which age group or even which sport I have first-hand knowledge about, because from conversations with parents across Knoxville and friends I have around the country, I now know that this is happening everywhere.

So here are the basics.

Parents are spending hundreds of dollars so that their kids can play a game. Long gone are the days of kids meeting at the local field, playing until the street lights come on, and then coming home for a nutritious dinner that their Mom spent all day cooking. And that of course is fine. Except for the dinner part... more home cooked meals would be great.

But now it isn't as simple as knowing you have 100 kids that want to play, so just put all their names in a hat and split teams evenly. Now, you have teams that are allowed to "protect" players... and all teams have to "draft" players.

So here is what happens. The top 3-4 teams in the league from the previous season know who the best players are and snatch them up before any other teams can. That means they make sure the top 16-20 players in the league go to them, thus ensuring victories before games are even played.

In addition, because you have to draft players, these coaches can instruct the other really good players they've learned about to not even attend an open tryout, so that when it is time to draft, the other teams had no way to learn about their talents.

This leads to having 3-4 teams stacked with mostly experienced players and the other teams left with mostly inexperienced players.

There was one game I saw that every player on one team whose smallest player was still taller than the tallest player on the other team. And this isn't a rare occurrence.

When I asked league officials about why certain teams are allowed to stack their rosters, I was told this was allowed "for consistency," and that the following year teams would be more even as the inexperienced players gain some playing time.

The error in this logic is that if in 2015 you get a team with no experience going against a team with three years of experience, in that next year the team with one year experience is now going up against a team with 4 years of experience. So no, it does not even out.

"Playing against better competition will make you better!" This is the battle cry from the folks that have the built in advantage. Ask if they'd like to switch places.

As if watching kids compete on a slanted playing field isn't enough, the way that coaches act on a consistent basis is troubling.

In God We Trust

"Recognition of the Supreme Being is the first, the most basic expression of Americanism. Without God, there could be no American form of government, nor American way of life." Dwight D. Eisenhower, 1955

America has changed dramatically since President Eisenhower penned those words. I was four years old in 1955, and so my memories of the fifties and early sixties consist of endless summers, sandlot baseball and riding my bike to the neighborhood drugstore to buy baseball cards and fountain cherry-cokes. It was in those halcyon days that I first heard the siren song of an "itsy-bitsy teenyweenie yellow polka dot bikini," and my transition to adulthood began.

I don't think America has evolved for the better, as some progressives say. Our technology is better. The internet is a wondrous tool for the inquisitive. Our science, when not corrupted by politically motivated grants, allows us to see farther and understand more about the universe. However, human beings have not fundamentally changed in perhaps tens of thousands of years. And if unbridled we are too often inhuman.

I once read that the first prayer uttered by one of our ancestors upon exiting his cave and gazing upward at the stars, was an "Ahhh," of wonder. Why have so many of us lost this wonder? Why has our horizon shrunk instead of expanding? When I was a boy my whole world was my neighborhood. As I grew older my horizon expanded to encompass my town, then my country and finally the world. Now, we are able to see into the depths of atoms and outwards to the edge of the universe. Unfortunately, some no longer see the Creator of it all. What a blighted horizon to only see as far as reality TV.

I am a monotheist. I believe in an intelligent and purposeful Creator, and His fundamental principles necessary for a successful life. Eisenhower understood this perspective as did Albert Einstein. Why do so many of our citizens put their trust in frail men or the institutions of mankind, such as government? An ancient Greek philosopher named Protagoras once said, "Man is the measure of all things." What a pitiable world view, conditioned by his unwillingness to see beyond his senses or to bend his pride before God. I believe this learned man had actually devolved from his proverbial ancestral caveman.

Recently, I read that the new Oxford dictionary for children has removed the word sin from this dictionary. Modern man struggles with the notion of sin and many object to the Garden of Eden story/allegory of sin. Theologically, I too have trouble seeing the sinful or "fallen" nature of my twelve week old granddaughter, Josie. Perhaps we need to come to an age of "understanding" before we can choose God's way or our way. My wife Becky better describes Adam's "original sin" as his "original separation" from God. Perhaps this is operative in each of us as we consider whether we are the measure of all things or whether we side with the maker of all things. Hubris is, after all, a powerful tonic.

We again find ourselves in the political season of sound bites, gotchas and verbal jousting. I'm already sick of it and lament the waste of money on the meaningless rhetoric of politicians. It would be a lot simpler to just put Hillary Clinton in a boxing ring with Carly Fiorina and let the best woman win. It certainly would be entertaining, but someone would whine that the sixty year old Fiorina might have an age advantage over poor Hillary, who's sixtyseven. Victims abound in our society.

I've written previously about hate speech and illiberalism. Look up the definitions if you need to; it will exercise your mind and expand your horizon. The latest news cycle kerfuffle is whether the opposition of some Christians to gay marriage constitutes hate speech. In other words, someone's First Amendment rights may be intolerable to others and must be silenced. Illiberalism is again on display as we await the Supreme Court's decision on the redefinition of marriage. I find it a sign of the times that we trust nine old men and women to tell us what is right. You do realize that only 2-3% of Americans are gay and less than 1% of Americans are Muslim. Yet both of these minorities rule the day in our politics. What will happen if gay marriage becomes the law of our land as it did recently in Ireland? Won't Muslims be even more offended by same sex marriage than by drawing pictures of Mohammed?

We use words to communicate, though I also read body language. I understand when I've displeased my wife - even if I may not immediately know what I've done. Symbols are also important. Case in point is the recent dustup when a company placed an upside down American flag on their tee-shirts. I don't know whether the company was trying to make a statement or just sell their wares. Through watching the Netflix series House of Cards I learned that an American flag displayed upside down is a sign of distress. It seems to me that the company was stating the obvious, but that was intolerable to some and the company bowed to pressure and removed the "offensive" shirts from the market.

believe in the Т Constitution and the First Amendment which guarantees freedom of speech and religion. I challenge you to read the First Amendment today and consider the words "establishment" and "free exercise." The Constitution guarantees that a state religion will not be established and guarantees the freedom to exercise religion, even if it is the Christian religion.

AsaconservativeIbelieve that every citizen should have equal opportunity under the law. This defines a republic. Absolute equality is different and a utopian vision. Actually, equality of all men exists only in the eyes of God. But what if man says No! God, and replaces Him with the idols of money, sex, self, or government? It's been done over and over throughout history, and always with the same result.

Our coinage says, "In God We Trust." I hope that is still true and America will survive this dark time to experience a rebirth of God-given "unalienable rights." We shall see.

Tennova Healthcare Introduces LSVT BIG Therapy

New physical and occupational therapy program helps individuals with Parkinson's disease

Tennova Healthcare now offers LSVT BIG therapy for neurology patients at North Knoxville Medical Center in Powell and Lakeway Regional Hospital in Morristown. LSVT BIG is a physical and occupational therapy program designed to improve motor skills in individuals with Parkinson's disease. LSVT BIG improves limb and body movement through a series of exercises. Adapted from the principles behind Lee Silverman Voice Treatment (LSVT) for Parkinson's patients, LSVT BIG was developed following extensive research funded by the National Institutes of Health. It can also benefit patients whose motor function has been affected by other neurological conditions, such as stroke, multiple sclerosis and cerebral palsy. the dysfunction of nerve cells in a part of the brain called the basal ganglia and a reduction in the production of dopamine," said Jose A. Cardenas, M.D., neurologist, Tennova Neurology Group North. Dr. Cardenas specializes in the diagnosis and treatment of neurological conditions including Parkinson's disease, multiple sclerosis, migraines and stroke. "Persons with Parkinson's disease often experience muscle stiffness, tremors of the arms and legs when resting, stooped posture, and balance and walking problems. The good news is physical and occupational therapy can help to ease movement disorders and improve quality of life," he said.

"LSVT BIG focuses on repetitive movements that reduce dopamine loss in the brain and are designed to recalibrate muscle function. This helps to counteract the slow movement that is one of the main motor symptoms of Parkinson's disease," said Rachel Richards, PT, physical therapist at North Knoxville Medical Center. Richards has received specialized training and certification in LSVT BIG.

while engaged in everyday activities. Therapy often yields measureable results within the first few treatments. These improvements include faster walking with bigger steps, better posture, improved balance, and increased trunk rotation. certification in LSVT BIG. Treatment typically takes place over a single month. Patients attend four individual 60-minute sessions per week for four weeks. A physician's written prescription is required.

Tennova Healthcare offers physical, occupational and speech therapy at eight convenient locations in East Tennessee. LSTV LOUD therapy, a speech therapy program for people with Parkinson's disease, is also offered at both North Knoxville Medical Center and Lakeway Regional Hospital. In 1915 a poem written by Moina Michael commemorates the day that everyone remembers as Memorial Day.

We cherish too, the Poppy red That grows on fields where valor led,

It seems to signal to the skies that blood of heroes never dies.

The poem refers to the thousands who died so that we may be free. Every year we go through the same ritual of remembrance and it is a ritual that will never grow old. She then conceived of an idea to wear red poppies on Memorial Day in honor of those who died serving the nation during the World War 1.

Memorial Day was originally called Decoration Day, I remember that well from my childhood days. There are many stories as to its actual beginnings, with over two dozen cities and towns laying claim to being the birthplace of Memorial Day. President Lyndon Johnson in May, 1966, officially declared Waterloo, N.Y. as the birthplace of Memorial Day, but it's difficult to prove conclusively the origins of this holiday. It is not important who was the very first, what is important is that Memorial Day was established. It is about coming together to honor those who gave their all.

Traditional observance of this holiday has diminished over the years. Many Americans nowadays have forgotten the meaning and traditions of Memorial Day. At many cemeteries the graves of the fallen are increasingly ignored, neglected. While there are towns and cities that still hold Memorial Day parades, many have not held a parade in decades.

To help re-educate and remind Americans of the true meaning of Memorial Day, the National Moment of Remembrance resolution was passed in December, 2000 which asks that at 3 p.m. local time, for all Americans "to voluntarily and informally observe in their own way a moment of remembrance and respect, pausing from whatever they are doing for a moment of silence or listening to Taps". This is a step in the right direction to returning the meaning back to the day. What is needed is a full return to the original day of observance. Set aside one day out of the year for the nation to get together to remember, reflect and honor those who have given their all in service to their county. Changing the date merely to create threeday weekends has undermined the very meaning of the day. Bills were referred to the committee on the Judiciary of Government Reform which proposes to restore the traditional date back to May 30th. To date there have been no further developments on that bill.

Whatever date Memorial Day falls on, it behooves us to never forget those who gave their lives so that we can live in freedom. Because of them we can be happy on Memorial Day.

Thought for the day: A day above ground is a good day.

Speaking the truth in love

We live in a day when many Christians are becoming more and more concerned about the direction of this nation, By Mark me being one of Brackney, them. How should Minister of the Christians handle Arlington Church issues of the day of Christ that conscien-

tiously they cannot believe in or embrace? Does one just let government decide moral issues and thus Christians should just keep their mouths shut for the sake of tolerance? The Bible points out that there is a time and place to share convictions, but how one communicates those is vital in one's witness for Christ.

Paul told the Ephesians to "speak the truth in love" (4:15). There is such a thing as truth and many sincere Christians and pastors/ ministers do not share our culture's moral direction. But let me offer some guidance from God's Word as you "speak the truth in love" about your convictions.

Some people think "speaking the truth in love" gives them permission to say anything they want. It doesn't. We must choose our words carefully and then speak them in a loving way. Too often words, being filled with passion, come out in a non-loving way. You may have heard a person after speaking truth to someone in an arrogant or harsh tone say, "Now I'm just saying this because I love you." Really. If you love, you will not demean. In fact, right before Paul told the Ephesians to speak the truth in love, he also told them: "Be completely humble and gentle; be patient, bearing with one another in love" (Eph. 4:2). Humility demands a continual awareness of God, of our own sinfulness, and that others are equal to us as fellow image bearers of God. Our viewpoint may be important and even correct, but we are not to seek self-importance. We remain humble as we speak truth in love as a fellow sinner in need of God's grace.

Along with humility we need gentleness. This means we renounce harshness and violence that is so prevalent in our culture today. Some Christians are so hostile and defensive that they are difficult to be around. Gentleness conveys a desire not to harm. It is a valuing of the other person, even in disagreement.

Patience is mentioned next. This values others and allows them the room and time to fail, grow, and learn. Paul also mentions the importance of bearing with one another in love. We speak the truth in love, but we don't attack, hate, or devalue a person for any belief they may have. But bearing in love does not mean accepting sin. Hating sin but loving the sinner is a delicate balancing act, but I don't know how else a disciple of Christ is to act, for this is what Jesus demonstrated for us. While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. As Paul wrote the churches in Corinth and Galatia, you can read his strong, loving words to awaken them to truth, and thankfully they repented. So in your convictions, speak the truth, but make sure you do so in humility,
