Board of education surpluses lot for proposed Lonsdale center

Pastor Joe Smith addressed the Wednesday evening meeting of the Knox County Board of Education urging the board to surplus property to be used for the proposed youth recreation facility in Lonsdale.

By Pete Gawda

At a rather lengthy Knox County Board of Education meeting last Wednesday, board members, other government officials, interested citizens and parents expressed their opinions on discipline policies, the proposed Lonsdale youth recreation facility, school rezoning and transgen-

The board apparently had second thoughts about changes to school system policies on discipline. They voted to delay for 30 days the first reading of revised policies Policy J-191 Misbehavior and Disciplinary Options, Policy J-193 Student Suspension, Policy J-194 Zero Tolerance and Policy J-211 Harassment, Intimidation, Bullying and Cyber Bullying.

"I am afraid the policy will start to erode the discretion of the principal and the classroom teacher," was the opinion of Tony Norman. He felt that more input was needed from teachers and principals.

"We don't need to rush into anything until we are sure we are doing something beneficial," stated Mike McMillan.

Gloria Deathridge was the only board member to vote against delaying the first reading for 30 days in order to get input from principals and teachers. There was also lengthy discussion about surplussing school operated property that is owned by the county. The property is to be used for the proposed youth recreation facility in Lonsdale.

"All we are doing is surplussing a lot because the county asked us to do it," asserted Lynne Fugate. "This resolution further states that if nothing happens the property is transferred back to school."

"Communication from people in that area has been very opposed," stated Jennifer Owen. "People who are much further away have been not only very supportive but almost aggressively supportive. That alone for me is reason to pause and take a look at things." She expressed concern that the property would go to a

The Cove, Gov. Sevier Parkway and Lonsdale on county agenda

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

The storm damage at The Cove at Concord Park may be discussed when the Knox County Commission meets in work session next Monday at 5 p.m. in the City-County Building. The storm on May 27 downed trees, power lines and damaged the playground at the popular West Knox County park.

A report on the expenses related to the storm damage may be given by the finance department. Early estimates just after the storm were for around $150,000 or possibly higher. Knox County Parks and Recreation were hoping to cover the cost without asking for additional funds. Legacy Parks Foundation has established a fund for repairs there.

Responding to the downed power lines there, LCUB is establishing underground power lines to the park. The Cove was closed following the storms and during repairs there and a concert by a local band

The Knox County Parks and Recreation Department reopened The Cove Friday afternoon. The department is busy replacing benches, re-striping the parking lot, fixing fences, etc.

Commissioner John Schoonmaker is asking for a report from the Knox County Emergency Management about the response from the Emergency Management team to The Cove and Concord Park following the damage.

The Cove is located at 11808 South Northshore Drive, on the banks of the Tennessee River. It features a walking trail, playground, pavilion, swimming area, picnic tables with grills, and a sand volleyball court. The Cove also offers kayak, canoe and paddleboard rentals.

Also on the agenda for the June 19 work session is a motion by Commissioner Carson Dailey to ask the planning commission to conduct a survey to develop an approach and policies for managing the development along John Sevier Scenic Highway and present the results to the commission

Dailey told The Focus that in at least two incidents people have obtained a building permit for a house and then turned the house into a business. He said that commercial businesses are only permitted along John Sevier Highway at the intersections.

"It's designated as a historic highway but the only regulation on that is that buildings can't be more than 35-feet tall and no billboards are allowed,"

"The community is concerned about the development there," he said.

The Knox County School Board is asking the commission to accept surplus property located at Sam

Stephanie Welch addresses supporters as the Island Home resident kicks off her campaign for Knoxville's First District City Council seat.

Welch kicks off First District campaign

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

She organized the first "Walk to School Day" and has been involved on various organization boards such as YMCA, Ijams Nature Center, Leadership Knoxville, and serves on the new Recode Knoxville Advisory

These are just some of the qualifications that First District Candidate Stephanie Welch mentioned to about 100 supporters during her campaign kick-off Thursday at Candoro Marble Works in Vestal.

Four candidates are vying for the seat, which covers South Knoxville and Fort Sanders, to replace Councilman and former Vice Mayor Nick Pavlis, who introduced Welch and called on voters to not only support her candidacy but also to contribute to her campaign.

"These experiences positioned me well to serve the First District and Knoxville," she told the the past 17 or so years. You have supporters. Welch serves as an Army Reserve officer and said that the city has "unprecedented forward momentum" and added, "It takes careful planning, strategic investment and strong relationship skills."

"I take a moderate bridge-building approach," she said, noting that her strong work ethic comes from her father, who flew in from New Hampshire to surprise her at the campaign

She spoke of her experience, passion and work ethic and her ability to work with various people.

Welch has lived in the First District for 18 years and loves to bike and hike from her Island Home Park neighborhood. She has three rescue dogs. She serves as vice president of operations at Great Schools Partnership.

"She's been a public servant for to pay your dues, get involved and understand government when you walk in," Councilman Pavlis told the supporters. "I support her 100% and hope you will as well," he said.

"We've got four really good candidates but the one thing that convinced me was Stephanie's background," Pavlis said.

Among the supporters who attended were various city and county officials and many of Welch's First District neighbors. She's adopted the "Welch Grape Juice" colors for her campaign and the juice was featured among the snacks offered at the event.

Welch said she came to Knoxville to complete her graduate work at UT and decided to stay and become active in the city.

What Do the Terms Joint Custody and Full Custody Mean?

There are terms that I often hear thrown around by individuals in relation to the custody of children, and that's "joint custody," and "full custody," and I don't know that people really know what these terms actually mean. Full custody of a child is primarily a myth that does not exist except in very rare circumstances. In order for a judge to award a parent full custody of a child, that means that one parent is getting zero days of visitation with their child. None. That just does not happen

1. There is an extreme risk of danger to the children

2. One parent requests full custody, and the other parent doesn't fight them

Even if there is a risk of danger to the children, the court will often allow visitation with a parent to be supervised so that the parent who may be a danger, to have visitation with the children, but while someone is watching what is occurring during the visitation.

Well what about terminating the other parent's rights? Can that happen?

Generally, a court will not, "bastardize" a child. That means, the court will not take away a parent from a child. The court will generally only terminate a parent's rights if a new spouse is willing to adopt a child. So when the term "full custody," gets thrown around, we're talking about something that very rarely happens.

Well if "full custody" rarely happens, does "joint custody," mean everything else? Yes. Even if a parent only has two days a year of visitation, that is technically considered joint cus-

You may be asking, "Well, if I can't get full custody, what's the most amount of time with my child I can realistically get?" Most courts will give a parent at least every other weekend, and time during the summer and on holidays. A schedule like that typically ends up being around 278 days for one parent and 87 days for the other parent. If you are trying to get as many days as possible with your children, and you can get the other side to agree to an every other weekend type of custody arrangement, I would tell you to do it, because that's probably the best you would do in court.

School board discusses youth facility

By Pete Gawda

At their work session

last Monday the Knox County Board of Education discussed donating property for the proposed youth recreation facility in Lonsdale. Emerald Youth Foundation has proposed to build a youth recreation facility off Texas Avenue and adjacent to the Sam E. Hill Family Community Center. The proposed facility is to consist of two multipurpose lighted athletic fields and a building housing, among other things, a gymnasium and auditorium. The site of the athletic fields is already owned by the city. As part of a program to eliminate dilapidated properties the city bought each lot on that block. However, as the board's legal council, Gary Dupler, explained, the school system operates a playground on the site of the proposed building and the property is owned by the county. In order to consolidate the property into one city owned parcel, the school board must declare the property to be surplus. Then the county commission can deed it to the city and the city will then enter an agreement with Emerald Youth Foundation on

Why Trump Took Us Out of Paris Climate Agreement

By Steve Hunley, Publisher publisher@knoxfocus.com

President Donald Trump was looking out for the United States by taking us out of the Paris Climate Change Accord. First of all, the agreement was not an "accord" in any sense; it was a treaty. The reason it was referred to as an "accord" in this country is because then-President Barack Obama didn't want to take the agreement to would have caused the expected to pony up $100 agreement without the was not obligated to reduce the United States Senate, demise of thousands of which the Constitution requires to ratify or reject treaties. and leftists all across the country are gnashing their teeth and pulling out their hair, screaming as if it is the end of the world. Why was the Paris Climate agreement a bad deal for the United States? It was a bad deal because it is very costly in terms of dollars. It was a terrible deal for the taxpayers. It was a bad deal for each and every American who relies upon affordable energy. By 2035, the Paris Climate Treaty would have destroyed $2.5 trillion in US

Nor was the Paris Climate Treaty especially effective. Even should every signatory to the treaty met its goals, which is highly doubtful when one considers China has been under-reporting its own emissions for years, there are still no repercussions should any country fail to meet its own pledge. That means any changes in the temperature of the earth would be virtually undetectable.

Obama provided $1 billion of taxpayer money, without going to Congress to get it. Nor are there any protections in the agreement to protect the taxpayer funds from corrupt regimes and dictatorships. Comparing the environmental standards of the United States and China is like comparing a stallion to a cricket. China has routinely falsified its consumption of coal and air monitor-

Obama had also said, "The private sector already chose a low-carbon future." If what Obama said was in fact true, what was the need for the government to clamp down? Furthermore, MIT has verified President Trump's statement that if the Paris Treaty was rigidly followed, it would have the effect of lowering the global climate by 0.2 degrees by the year 2100.

While insisting that America be bound to this treaty, many of the other countries signing the agreement made non-binding agreements. Basically, they get a free ride and aren't obligated to do a thing. For instance, China India made no commitment on emissions at all, merely pledging to "make progress" on its energy efficiency. Pakistan offered a pledge to "reduce its emissions after reaching peak levels to the extent possible." Germany has had two straight years where its own emissions have increased, while the Philippines has renounced its earlier commitment.

The President of the United States has a duty to take the course that serves the best interests of the American people. Certainly Barack Obama and the left believe in globalism and advanced that particular agenda. We should be proud we have a president who does what's right for

Building on the skeleton of South High School

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

Old South High School is a landmark of South Knoxville. The skeleton of the huge brick structure sits next to the Sarah Simpson Professional Development Technology Center which houses the Knox County Museum of Education.

On the walls of the museum are two glass cases with South High School mementos, jackets and letter sweaters. The school building next door has been vacant since 1991 and the last class to graduate there was in 1978.

Since being abandoned the school was sold by Knox County to a buyer who let the building deteriorate. The city council stepped up to rescue the structure, bought it for $190,000, declaring the structure "blighted" and then the city reinforced what parts of the building that could be saved. Bob Booker comments on the upcoming city election

steelym@knoxfocus.com

Listening to Knoxville's Bob Booker is like reliving bygone life and times in our area. In a mellow tone and clear pronunciation Booker weaves stories from our past like no one else can.

The 82-year-old— a veteran of Civil Rights demonstrations and the Army, Knoxville College graduate, high school teacher, state representative, city council member and city employee— brings a wealth of experience and life to any audience.

Last week Booker was speaking before the Democratic Women of Knoxville at the Central Labor Council building. He said that while researching information on African-Americans in Knoxville he became interested in all of the local history. He told several tales he gleaned from old newspapers published in the city.

Asked by The Focus to give his thoughts on the race for City Council in the 6th District Booker answered, "There are too many people in the race." Thirteen candidates have qualified in the race to replace Councilman and former Mayor Daniel Brown.

He said that the demographics are changing in the district, which now stretches from Burlington in East Knoxville to Lonsdale and Mechanicsville and includes most of the downtown area. He mentioned the influx of new residents in new apartment buildings, renovated buildings, etc. that changes the population of the traditionally African-American area.

Will the city actually move to regulate in-home short-term rentals? The matter was on the council agenda Tuesday after the Metropolitan Planning Commission passed the idea in a split 8-4 vote.

He once worked for the Knox County Highway Department and operated a piece of earth moving equipment often referred to as a road grader. One project he worked on was building Cedar Lane that runs off of Broadway. His name was George O. Major, and he was our grandfather.

The grandfather my brother, Wayne, and I remember raised beef cattle and lived across the road from us. He once went to the Clinton Stockyard and bought a pony named Trixie for the grandchildren to ride. She had two gaits. One was a slow walk. The other was a faster slow walk if it started thundering. We recall many times seeing our grandfather jump on one of the grandchildren's bicycles and go coasting down the on Friday nights, he would go to Chilhowee Park to watch the wrestling matches live. Every Saturday he quit work in time to watch the major league baseball game on NBC. He would sit back in his La-Z Boy and eat popcorn while listening to broadcasters Curt Gowdy and Tony Kubek. When the wrestling program came on, he would sit on the edge of the chair. It is still hard for me to believe he ventured out on a cold November night to see me twirl fire in the Knoxville Junior Miss Pageant downtown. This month, we celebrate and honor the fathers who are still with us and remember those who have passed on. It is one of the Ten Commandments in the Bible. "Honor thy father and thy mother: that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." (Exodus 20:12, KJV) Happy Father's

His son, Stephen Austin, continued the effort, and soon the population, many from Tennessee, grew to more than 20,000 people. By 1832 the disagreement between the settlers and the Mexican government erupted into war. It soon led to the standoff at the Alamo, the attack by Santa Anna's troops, and the massacre that took the lives of the defenders. It is estimated that more than 15% of those killed in the Alamo were Tennesseans.

"I'm not going to be bold enough to say black people ought to have the seat but they went above and beyond to make the seat available so that blacks could stand a chance," he said.

Asked about the problems and future of Knoxville College, Booker said he sees "a glimmer of hope." He noted that Knox County has an interest in some of the property there, that some of the roofs are being repaired, and that a new administration there is helping.

Asked about a book he has been working on for seven years Booker said that "An Encyclopedia of Black People in Knoxville, Tn., 1874-1974" contains "some of everything people ought to know about the black community in detail." Booker said the book is at the printers and should be available in a few weeks. The book follows the community from the days of slavery and has stories not only about Cal Johnson, who rose from slavery to become one of the wealthiest men in town, but also about Johnson's mother and father. Although a slave Johnson's father was also a jockey. Copies of the new book will be available at the Beck Cultural Center.

Dr. John R. Neal Tennessee's Eccentric

Pages from the Past

By Ray Hill rayhill865@gmail.com

Dr. John Randolph Neal had some solid achievements under his belt, both as a state legislator and educator, yet there was growing dissatisfaction at the University of Tennessee. That dissatisfaction seemed to be confined largely to administrators, as Dr. Neal was apparently quite popular with his students. By 1923, those same administrators had decided to let John R. Neal go. To this day the reasons for Neal's dismissal are unknown, although there are numerous theories and just as many opinions. Bobby E. Hicks, Neal's biographer, concluded the most likely reason Dr. Neal was fired was "because of a personality conflict with the dean of the College of Law, Malcolm McDermott." Dean McDermott was not happy with Neal's personal appearance, indifference to bookkeeping, and unorthodox teaching methods. McDermott had complained to the president of the University of Tennessee, Harcourt Morgan, about Neal's teaching methods "repeatedly." Neal and six other professors were notified in June of 1923 they had not been recommended for reappointment; on July 17, 1923, they were told they had been fired. Officially, the decision was made by President Morgan, by the Board of Trustees. When the university's trustees came to Knoxville many of them were greeted by students who supported Dr. Neal in particular and when Governor Austin Peay arrived, he called for an open meeting. The previous meeting of the Board of Trustees confirming Neal's

None of the trustees dared refuse the request of Governor Peay for a public meeting, which was held at Knoxville's Farragut Hotel. The meeting was described by Neal's biographer as "bedlam" and with constant activity some thought it more resembled a "political meeting" than a sedate university affair. The governor patiently met with numerous supporters, both student and alumni, of Dr. Neal who protested his firing and begged that he be allowed to teach at the university. Numerous students spoke at the public meeting on Neal's behalf and when the professor finally appeared he was greeted with thunderous applause. Dr. Neal was obviously deeply touched by the support of so many of his former students and had difficulty in controlling his emotions. Harcourt Morgan read fourteen charges against Neal serious. One of the charges seemed to indicate fundamental resentment towards Neal by the administration, noting the professor routinely sided with the students against the administration in any dispute. The charges included his dress, the fact he smoked in Ayres Hall, which was forbidden, and was lax in his work. Dr. Neal was given twenty minutes to refute the charges leveled against him. Neal hotly contested the allegations and pointed out he had never once missed a class in thirteen years while in Knoxville; in fact, he had come to his classes even when ill. John R. Neal pointedly asked Harcourt Morgan if the University president had ever come with any criticism of his performance. President Morgan had to confess that he had not. Neal insisted he was always within "earshot" of his students and classroom during examinations and noted that Dean McDermott was not in his own classroom while administering tests. Neal never denied that he had once changed the schedule for an exam, but said it was commonly done by other professors as well. Nor was he the only professor who violated the smoking ban in Ayres Hall, Neal snapped. Neal noted he part of that time, he had received not a penny of compensation. Neal claimed much of the credit for the University of Tennessee law school to be only the second in the South to be admitted in the National Association of American Law Colleges. Neal said he thought the University of Tennessee ought to be represented during a convention of law schools and urged Harcourt Morgan to send some one. President Morgan demurred, saying the university could not afford it. Dr. Neal went and paid his own way. Several students addressed the Board of Trustees; one student believed Dr. Neal was the "most beloved professor in the school..." At least one student stated Dean McDermott had never treated Dr. Neal with respect. The student praised John R. Neal as a professor who taught students to "think for themselves." He added Dean McDermott's own teaching style "could never make a successful law student." It was all for naught as the Board of Trustees felt they had to uphold Harcourt Morgan's decision to fire John R. Neal and the other professors. There was one very important dissenter: Governor Austin Peay. The governor bluntly said he did not like the methods used by the university administration to fire the instructors. Peay was careful to say he did approve of Harcourt Morgan, but was quite clear in saying he thought the reasons for the dismissals unjustified. Governor Peay voted against the dismissals, as did one other member of the Board. The pressure on the other Board members was clear, with one trustee saying he felt the decision was choosing between President Morgan or Dr. Neal, yet they could not keep both. There were efforts made to reinstate John R. Neal and a letter arrived from the dean of the University of Denver's law school which gave the professor an unqualified endorsement. The dean credited Dr. Neal with "inspiring his students" which increased the interest had worked at the University of the students and caused Denver promptly offered Neal a full professorship,

> The effort to have the University of Tennessee to rehire John R. Neal came to nothing. President Morgan disingenuously said he would be willing to have Dr. Neal back if the Board of Trustees were to change their minds. Morgan pointed out as the Board had no such intention, the matter was closed. Losing his job at the University of Tennessee's law school crushed John R. Neal. The professor seemed unable to face friends and former colleagues and took pains to avoid them, even as they sought him out to provide friendship and comfort. Neal's mental state was reflected in his personal dress and hygiene. If it was bad before, it became much worse after his having been fired. That was the cause for the management of the S & W Cafeteria to ban John R. Neal from the premises.

but he refused the offer.

Neal recovered enough to launch a furious assault on the university, demanding the state legislature begin an immediate investigation. Neal growled that President Morgan was "legally, morally and mentally incompetent" to hold so high a position and responsibility. Dr. Neal charged Harcourt Morgan with having "instituted a system of terrorism at the university, both over the faculty and student body." Neal even went so far as to question whether or not Harcourt Morgan was a citizen of the United States. Neal testified before the General Assembly and hit the university some hard blows. Dr. Neal noted one member of the Board of Trustees also happened to be president of the City National Bank. That University of Tennessee had deposits in the City National Bank and Neal pointed out state law forbade any member of the Board of Trustees from having a personal financial interest or deriving personal financial gain. Neal told legislators the University of Tennessee was the only such education institution whose president and virtually ever dean did not have more than a few UT administrators embarrassed. When the University of Tennessee announced in 1925 it would cease giving the annual John R. Neal Oratorical Award to the outstanding debate student it seemed little more than spite. Dr. Neal retorted he would bestow the award himself. The legislature issued a report, but did nothing. Neal, persistent to the end, notified Governor Peay the Board of Trustees was not composed as required by law, as one-third of the members were required to be alumni. 1925 also saw Dr. Neal open the John Randolph Neal School of Law. To the horror and dismay of University of Tennessee officials, the John R. Neal School of Law was quite a success throughout and political prominence of the decades of the 1920s and 1930s. Dr. Neal eventually began graduating more students than the University of Tennessee law school. Neal continued to be both kind and careless, shuffling through checks for tuition and saying, "that boy can't afford to go to law school" and tear it to pieces. By the 1940s, the John R. Neal School of Law was foundering. Doubtless the outbreak of war in 1941 made things difficult for the school, but the enrollment continued to declined until there were no students enrolled. Mencken, the "Sage of Baltimore", wrote that Neal was "an able lawyer and a man of repute" and opined that "in any Northern State his courage would get the praise it deserves." Mencken sadly noted that "in Tennessee even the intelligentsia seem to feel that he has done something discreditable by sitting at the trial table with Darrow, Hays, and Malone." Mencken complained and condemned the fact that the "state buzzes with trivial, idiotic gossip about him --- that he dresses shabbily, Few people today recall it, that he has political aspirations, and so on." Galyon uses sports to spread faith, fun at area camp

But he quickly discovered that sales wasn't his call-

Galyon then answered a call to work for Fellowship of Christian Athletes.

"When I came home, I went to work for FCA because I love being around kids and I love to share my faith," Galyon said. "I love to be around sports and I love to share my faith and this gives me the opportunity to do both."

After his playing career was over, he did come back to Seymour, where he played baseball, football and basketball, and served as a volunteer assistant with the Eagles football team.

Now he works for FCA in Knox and Sevier Counties and he spoke to Powell's young basketball players at the Fellowship of Christian Athletes Presents the Panther Pride Basketball Camp

Powell grads share basketball with community's youth

By Ken Lay

As recent high school graduates, Reilly Hamilton and Matt Samples are preparing for the next stage of their lives.

Both received a high school diploma last month and both are getting ready for college.

But recently, the two former Powell High School players took some time to share the game they love with Powell's youth at the Fellowship of Christian Athletes Presents the Panther Pride Basketball Camp last week at Powell Middle School.

The two 2017 Powell High graduates joined 2016 alum Conley Hamilton (Reilly's older brother who now attends East Tennessee State University) and PMS basketball coach Darin Courtney to run the camp. And they wouldn't want to be anywhere else.

"It means a lot to come back here and teach basketball to the next generation of Powell players," Reilly Hamilton said. "I grew up playing the game and I learned a lot.

"It's great to teach them what I've learned from the game."

For Samples, working the camp was a rewarding experience as he and the Hamilton Brothers all attended the camp when they were younger.

"Basketball has always been a part of these kids and it's great my life," he said. "I'm to get the chance to a second generation player at Powell. My dad

"It's great to see these kids come in here and work. They want to play the game and it's good to see these come in here and see that they're better than I was when I was their age."

Strider, who helped the Warriors won the 2017 Class AA State Championship recently in Murfreesboro, was recently named Tennessee Gatorade Player of the Year.

He received that honor soon after he was named Class AA Mr. Baseball by the Ten-

Ryan Radcliffe has won a Class AAA Soccer State Championship as both a coach and player.

And this year he had hopes of guiding the Bearden Bulldogs to a second consecutive title but that didn't happen as the Soccer Dogs were eliminated in the District 4-AAA Tournament semifinals at home by rival Farragut last month.

But Radcliffe recently got the opportunity to coach some of East Tennessee's best boys high school players in the Tennessee High School Soccer Coaches Association East/West All-Star Game in Hendersonville on Saturday, June 3. "It was a great experi-

Nadaud and Hames are Webb School honorees

By Steve Williams

Veteran football coach and athletic director David Meske had high praise for Jack Nadaud in the announcement of his selection as Webb School's male Student-Athlete of the Year for 2016-

Nadaud received All-State honors in football and also started in lacrosse for the fifth straight what an outstanding student-athlete should look like," said Meske. "He has committed himself to excellence in both the classroom and on the playing field. He is honorable, a great teammate, leader, classmate, friend and one of the most caring individuals that I have ever coached."

Junior volleyball standout Nicklin Hames, who is coached by her mom Chris Hames at Webb, is the school's female Student-Athlete of the Year.

Nadaud also received All-District and All-KIL honors in football. He was a two-year captain on the Spartans' lacrosse team and this year was a second-team

All-Region player.

Coach Hames has to be happy she has her daughter returning for one more year.

Tidmore was a two year starter in both softball and basketball. The outfielder helped lead the

OUR VETERANS NEXT DOOR

The Hidden Children of Europe

By Randall Baxter

I once spoke at the O'Connor Senior Citizen Center about the Korea War. A lady walked up and asked, "You probably are not interested in the story of a little girl in World War II are you?"

I said, "Sure I am." She began to tell me her story of "The Hidden Children."

In 1942 when she was less than two years old and living in the Netherlands, her parents were sent to Westerbork, a holding camp for Jewish citizens there. They ended up in Auschwitz and became two of the six million that were killed as part of the Final Solution. Also included in that number were her aunts, uncles, and her grandparents. She was the only one left in her family.

How did she get away? Was it a miracle? She'll never know if her parents thought about this for a long time, or made an onthe-spot decision to leave her behind. It was a friend of her daddy's who helped her get safely to her foster parents. She didn't find out that connection until the year 2000. They decided to leave her behind, which had to be the greatest sacrifice parents could make. They were put on a train in Rotterdam, heading for Auschwitz.

So, her parents had a choice?

Note to Reader:

What would you have done? Would you have held on to your daughter because of your love for her and taken her with you to her death? Would you have looked for a way to hand her off to safety?

She was given to a good friend of her father's, a well-known artist in Holland. He took her home where he lived all his life. He found an underground connection that, eventually, contacted her foster parents whom today she calls Mom and Pop. She had two sets of parents: her Mother and Daddy, who had to gave her up, and Mom and Pop, who risked their lives to keep her

She was known as a hidden child. She wasn't hidden in a closet. She was out in the open all her life. Nazis were everywhere during World War II. She was one of THE HIDDEN CHILDREN!

When things got too hot, when people asked questions she or her parents couldn't or wouldn't answer, they just moved to the other end of town. Imagine living in East Knoxville and moving to Karns (about 15 miles) and try to disappear? Not a chance, but the lack of communication then-no cell phones, no internet— kept her safer. She moved three times in those three years. Could you have survived that?

Tennessee Baseball Gets a New Direction, Yet Again

By Alex Norman

It didn't work with Todd Raleigh... It didn't work with Dave Serrano... Will it work with Tony Vitello?

Vols fans are hoping the third time is the charm with regards to the Tennessee baseball program.

Ever since then athletic director Mike Hamilton fired Rod Delmonico following the 2007 season, the Vols have been mediocre at best. They finished with a 108-113 record during Raleigh's four years (2008-2011) and a 157-163 mark during the six seasons Serrano was in charge (2012-2017). That's a winning combined winning percentage of just under 49%.

The numbers in SEC play are even more galling. The Vols went a combined 97-198 in conference play over the past decade, an anemic 28% winning rate.

Plain and simple, that's not going to get the job done at any level.

Delmonico might not have had the consistent success that Vols fans wished for, but he did get Tennessee to the College World Series three times (1995, 2001, 2005) and won 699 games from 1990-

2007. That seems like a lifetime ago.

So that's what Tony Vitello is stepping into.

While many Tennessee fans had hoped former Vol standout Chris Burke would get the head coaching job, he was never a serious candidate.

Vitello has a lot of what athletic director John Currie was looking for. Vitello has earned a reputation as one of the best recruiters in college baseball during his time at Missouri, TCU and Arkansas. He has experience in the SEC. He's been part of teams that have made it to lots of NCAA tournaments, a place the Vols haven't even come close to being in more than a decade.

In a press release from the University of Tennessee's athletic department, Currie said, "We are thrilled to bring Coach Vitello's passion for baseball, relationship building and student-athlete development into the Tennessee athletics family. Proven experience evaluating and recruiting at the highest level and in the grind of the SEC was an absolute prerequisite, and Coach Vitello checks all the boxes. He has a track record of helping to build healthy and competitive programs-from those earliest relationships formed during through the development of young men into major league ballplayers. Coach Vitello has been to a dozen NCAA Tournaments, and he's been part of a staff that led a team to Omaha. He knows firsthand what it takes to win in the Southeastern Conference, and he has triumphed in recruiting battles for elite prospects in our SEC footprint and other talent-rich areas

across the country."

the recruiting process

In the same release, Vitello said, "This is as good of an opportunity as there is in the country. I consider myself incredibly blessed to be a part of the athletic department at the University of Tennessee. It's the ultimate combination of an elite conference, a state school with great in-state players, a phenomenal city and outstanding tradition that exists not just with baseball, but across all sports. It's no coincidence that it's been a place where so many great coaches have been leaders in their sport. I want to work like crazy to uphold that standard."

Currie added, "Throughout this process it has been inspiring to talk to many of the people who are passionate about Volunteer baseball--I believe that Coach Vitello is the right person to build our program into a perennial contender and bring championship baseball back to Knoxville."

For Vitello, this will be his first head coaching job, which could be seen by some as a negative. But considering the putrid performance of the Tennessee baseball program during the experience laden Raleigh and Serrano, this isn't necessarily a bad thing.

Vitello is only 38 years old, and has proven that he can appeal to young players.

Baseball recruiting is a very difficult proposition. Players don't all get full rides. The maximum number of scholarships that a Division 1 team can give to its players is 11.7, so you have to wade in those delicate waters. Plus, if your recruits are drafted, you might lose them to the professional ranks.

Vitello also has to recruit with baseball facilities that have fallen a step behind many others in the SEC.

This is going to be a difficult rebuild.

We will find out in the years to come if Vitello is up to the task.

Yard Signs

As I pen this essay Becky and I are homeless. Actually, we're "tweeners," between our former home (Big House, which my daughter and her family now occupy) and our New House, which is not quite ready. It's worked out OK because we've been with my Mom, who had surgery and needed a capable nurse; she settled for an internist. Currently we're in Portland, Oregon babysitting my granddaughter. It's been a bit unsettling because as I wake up now I sometimes have to think where I am.

Portland has been in the news lately after a certifiable nut-job knifed to death two men on the local tram and then pleaded not-guilty to the assault. And as one of the victims lay bleeding to death a homeless man stole his backpack. The creep also stole the victim's wedding ring which the perp was still wearing when he was caught.

Like Knoxville, Portland

attracts a large number of homeless people. Social services and generous hearts are readily available for people who are unable to make it in society or choose not to do so.

When we were last here, I learned that petty crime is a big problem. The local Fred Meyers (Kroger) instructs its employees not to hinder shoplifters as they walk out the door. Apparently, it's cheaper to send a bill to the insurance company than to prosecute. While walking the dog, my sonin-law encountered a man walking down the alley with a flat screen TV at six am; and Freddy's doesn't open until 7am.

wife, Becky, published an that just because I live in essay in Newsweek magazine about petty crime. Her thesis was that small crimes that go unpunished lead to more serious ones. It's the same with gateway drugs such as marijuana which often lead to more serious drug usage.

fall just before the election. We saw no yard signs for Trump, undoubtedly because Portland is a very liberal-progressive community. Interestingly, I only saw one Hillary yard sign, many for Bernie Sanders, but dozens of Black Lives Matter signs. Those BLM signs are still everywhere though some are thankfully shrouded by spring flow-

The notion that Portland is uber-liberal was recently challenged by a controversial essay in the Washington Post, entitled "Portland Isn't Portlandia" (after the sitcom). The author maintains that Oregon is mostly white, anti-black and racist. Such sweeping conclusions are inherently prejudicial, and it amazes me that so many liberals see color in everything. There must be a low incidence of color blindness among liberals.

Perhaps the Washington Post essayist is manifesting "white guilt," after the book of the same name by Shelby Steele. Of course we all have prejudices, but I challenge the notion that Oregonians are racists. Twenty years ago my And I challenge the notion the South and I am conservative, I'm a racist or a bigot. I judge people by their thoughts and actions, not the color of their skin. It's time for Americans to stop being played by activists and the media. It's time to use reason instead

We were in Portland last of emotion. And it's time to get the signs out of our yards and hearts.

I never know where my stories will come from. The world looks different when you're walking instead of driving. It was yard signs which started this essay as I strolled with my granddaughter through the neighborhood and away from the neighbor's construction project.

The neighbors are raising their home six feet and digging out an additional 9 feet in the subfloor to stabilize the sagging foundation of their house. I learned that poor foundations are a common problem in Portland because of alluvial soil in the Columbia River basin, and problematic concrete in older Portland homes.

It all began about 12,000 years ago when the earth began to warm. You may be surprised to learn that we currently reside in an inter-glacial period called the Holocene epoch. The world was literally frozen for the previous 70,000 years, with the ice pack at Niagara Falls one mile deep. Fortunately for man, global warming, er..., climate change occurred.

As the earth warmed the glaciers melted and began to recede. Ice melt filled the Great Lakes which had been gouged out by glaciations. Lake Superior filled to a depth of 1000 feet. And as the glaciers melted, the Pacific Northwest was subject to repeated massive floods as ice dams forming the Missoula Glacial Lake repeatedly collapsed. The raging flood waters surged at eighty miles an hour and cumulatively deposited fifty cubic miles of soil across northern Idaho, Washington and the Columbia River Basin.

I'm reading a book by Philip Yancey who says few people are persuaded by argument or even a discussion. You probably wouldn't quibble with my research of the Missoula floods. Why would I lie? On the other hand, you might take issue with my perspectives in the first part of this essay or argue with me about anthropogenic global warming. I can report that a week in Portland caused me to again question global warming. Mark Twain once said, "The coldest winter I ever spent was a summer in San Francisco." For a southerner like me you could substitute Portland in the quotation for San Francisco.

Jesus knew the hearts of men when he advised his followers to let their light shine so others would see their good works and glorify their Father in Heaven. Yancey sides with Jesus, stating that people are persuaded by relationships and love, not debate, and certainly not by the politically correct term "conversations" which have become an oxymoron.

Last Sunday, as I sat in church among Portlandians, this Tennessee boy identified with other fellow Christians. These folks may be more liberal than me, but we share faith, language, culture and country. So, how did we become so divided? In WW II Americans were unified against Nazis, jingoistic Japanese and communism - with the possible exceptions of some elites and media (NY Times) who were sympathetic of Uncle Joe Stalin's murderous communism.

I've asked myself this question many times and have come to the following conclusions: we have been divided by political and media operatives (class warfare); our national identity, founded on Judeo-Christian principles, is being systematically subverted; our public discourse is shaped by emotions rather than facts and reason; and the rule of law under the Constitution is eroding as is our freedom.

So what do we do? Francis Schaeffer summed up the proper response in his book "How Then Should We Live." He said we should follow the wisdom of the Bible (not the Koran). We should speak the truth (with love, as Paul added). And we must pray for the lost and remember that God is with us. And I would add the admonition of a friend, "get inspired; get informed and get involved."

Jehovah-Sabaoth

The name of God that we are studying today is Jehovah Sabaoth, which at its root, refers to a captain or general who commands a mighty army. It's used over 270 times in the Bible. God is the king and commander and mobilizes His army to accomplish His purposes. When we truly understand this name for God, we will never view Him the same again. He has unlimited power, is impossible to describe, and incredible to imagine. The name Jehovah Sabaoth is used when God's people are in big trouble. We could say it this way: God goes to battle when our backs are up against the wall.

The first instance of Jehovah Sabaoth is found in 1 Samuel 1:3, where we read that Elkanah went up from his town every year to "worship and sacrifice to the Lord Almighty [Jehovah Sabaoth] at Shiloh." We learn that one of his wives, Hannah, was barren and in that culture barrenness was thought to be a sign of God's displeasure. Penninah, Elkanah's other wife, had children and she kept provoking Hannah in order to irritate and harass her. She is so upset she wept and would not eat. Hannah was bitter and broken and took her requests to Jehovah Sabaoth. She made a vow saying: "O LORD Almighty [Jehovah Sabaoth], if you will only look upon your servant's misery and remember me, and not forget your servant but give her a son, then I will give him to the LORD for all the days of his life" (I Samuel 1:11). Hannah needed God to unleash the armies of heaven because she was at the end of her rope. God heard her request and gave her a son named Samuel who served as a great judge and priest of Israel.

We find this name for God again in 1 Samuel 17 where we read the account of David and Goliath. The Philistines were nemesis of Israel and had gathered for war in the Valley of Elah to take on God's people. The Philistines had a champion named Goliath who had body armor that weighed 125 pounds and was armed with a javelin, a spear and a shield bearer. This huge man challenged the Israelites to a fight to the death as he shouted out blasphemies against God. David, the shepherd boy, couldn't believe what he was hearing. While no one in the army of Isreal had the courage to face Goliath, David did.

After teasing David, Goliath called out a curse on David and declared that he would feed him to the birds and the beasts. David responded: "You come against me with sword and spear and javelin, but I come against you in the name of the LORD Almighty, [Jehovah Sabaoth] the God of the armies [Sabaoth] of Israel, whom you have defied" (I Sam. 11:45). David then describes in great detail what he will do to Goliath and declares: "All those gathered here will know that it is not by sword or spear that the LORD saves; for the battle is the LORD's, and he will give all of you into our hands" (11:47). David was so confident in Jehovah Sabaoth as the commander of the armies of heaven that the Bible says "he ran quickly toward the battle line to meet him." With one stone from his sling, he killed the Recently, two cases of canine influenza were confirmed in the Knoxville area by the University of Tennessee College of Veterinary Medicine. Hobo's annual cines and veterinarian visit with Dr. Ann Combs presented the perfect opportunity to discuss concerns I had with H3N8 and H3N2 strains of canine influenza. The origin of H3N2 was China, Korea, and Thailand until 2015, the H3N8 represents adaptive evolution from equine to dogs. Regardless of the virus or the origin, both pose significant health risk to your dogs and cats.

Prevention:

Anywhere there are large concentrations of dogs there is the risk of contracting canine influenza. Be wise when visiting:

Doggie daycare

- Boarding facilities
- Groomers
- Dog parks
- Training facilities
- and competitions

It only takes one exposure to infect your pet with influenza. The best practice is prevention if you are boarding your pet or utilizing doggie daycare facilities ask the manager about what preventative steps they are taking to protect their populations. the same things you would from your doctor or nurse—handwashing with soap and water:

- before and after handling other dogs or their food / water bowls
- After cleaning or handling cages and toys
- Any contact with a dogs urine, feces, or

Reputable facilities using disinfectants commonly used in veterinary and boarding facilities can help minimize and prevent the influenza virus from spreading from surfaces.

Signs and symptoms of canine influenza:

- Sneezing
- Runny Nose

- Ocular discharge
- Fever (104° 106°)
 - Cough
 - Anorexia
 - Fatigue

Coughing, sneezing, and nasal discharge are similar to other respiratory illnesses, therefore cannot be used to diagnose influenza. Pets presenting with any of these symptoms should be examined by your veterinarian immediately. Canine influenza is highly contagious to other dogs and cats; it is wise to quarantine suspected pets until cleared by your pet's healthcare professional. According to the American Veterinary Medical Association, Cat's signs and symptoms will include nasal discharge, congestion, fatigue, lip smacking, and excessive salivation. Diagnosis of canine influenza is usually completed by a blood test, or by the ELISA tests to detect influenza A and B in humans. As with any influenza—early diagnosis and treatment is your best
