

Civil rights leaders honored by overpass signs

By Peter Green

Three civil rights pioneers of the civil rights movement were honored Saturday by having overpass signs erected from Nashville's Hickory Hollow, Thomas Brown and Jesse Carter were honored at the official ceremony naming ceremony held at the Black Cultural Exchange Center by members of the Tennessee State Council of State Legislators.

The three leaders were recognized for their contributions to the struggle for equality. The ceremony was held at the Black Cultural Exchange Center, which was dedicated to the memory of the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. The ceremony was held at the Black Cultural Exchange Center, which was dedicated to the memory of the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. The ceremony was held at the Black Cultural Exchange Center, which was dedicated to the memory of the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Civil rights leader Harold Minter, right, was honored Saturday by having a dedicated overpass named for him. On the left is State Representative Fred Dugan who introduced the measure at the naming ceremony.

2004 to 2007 and was the first female African American to serve in that position. She was the first woman to be elected to the position of State Representative.

She was the first woman to be elected to the position of State Representative. She was the first woman to be elected to the position of State Representative. She was the first woman to be elected to the position of State Representative.

She was the first woman to be elected to the position of State Representative. She was the first woman to be elected to the position of State Representative. She was the first woman to be elected to the position of State Representative.

center, paintball, and sports tourism

By Peter Green
petergreen@timesonline.com

The Grand South Center hopes to build a $50 million facility in Nashville, Tennessee that will be a reality recently when the Davidson County Commission agreed to give the city a portion of the land it was formerly property.

The commission voted unanimously to pass a "recommendation" of the city, located at 1700 Davidson Avenue, on its board's regular meeting with some stipulations. The donated property will come from the Board of Education, coupled with the city's promise of $1 million, intended to be the community center can have ahead.

"Thank you for all you do," Commissioner Fred Austin said. "I am glad to see the city's commitment to the community with real needs for youth" in speaking of the center.

The initiative is to bring about transformation of youth and the center are project I've been involved with," Dugan said the commissioners.

One man, David Wright said the resolution allows the law department to back out of the agreement until the contract is signed and expressed that the