It is important to note that the results of this study are based on a cross-sectional design. Therefore, the causal relationship between the variables cannot be established. Future research should use a longitudinal design to investigate the changes in the variables over time.

Following a 1999 review of the existing evidence on the effectiveness of various types of interventions, the Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) published a report on the effectiveness of interventions for the treatment of alcohol and drug abuse (SAMHSA, 2000). The report found that the most effective interventions for the treatment of alcohol and drug abuse are those that are based on the principles of behavior change and that are delivered by trained personnel. The report also found that the most effective interventions are those that are delivered in a structured, manualized format and that are delivered in a group setting. The report also found that the most effective interventions are those that are delivered in a community setting and that are delivered in a culturally sensitive manner.

On the other hand, the fact that the number of people who have been killed in the past few years is much smaller than the number who have been killed in the past few years is a very good indication that the number of people who have been killed in the past few years is much smaller than the number who have been killed in the past few years.
