

OFFICIALS OPEN FOREST HEIGHTS POCKET PARK

Mayor Heather Rogers, Vice Mayor Thomas Wilson, City Councilor at Large Jennifer Hightower, Mayor and City Councillor at Large David Hightower, and other city officials gathered to inaugurate the Forest Heights Pocket Park.

Knoxville 1st Tennessee city certified as wildlife habitat

Knoxville was the first Tennessee city to be certified as a wildlife habitat by the National Wildlife Federation. The city's certification was announced on Tuesday, October 1, 2008.

The city's certification was announced by the National Wildlife Federation, which is a national organization that promotes the protection and conservation of wildlife and their habitats.

The city's certification was announced by the National Wildlife Federation, which is a national organization that promotes the protection and conservation of wildlife and their habitats.

The city's certification was announced by the National Wildlife Federation, which is a national organization that promotes the protection and conservation of wildlife and their habitats.

The city's certification was announced by the National Wildlife Federation, which is a national organization that promotes the protection and conservation of wildlife and their habitats.

The city's certification was announced by the National Wildlife Federation, which is a national organization that promotes the protection and conservation of wildlife and their habitats.

The city's certification was announced by the National Wildlife Federation, which is a national organization that promotes the protection and conservation of wildlife and their habitats.

The city's certification was announced by the National Wildlife Federation, which is a national organization that promotes the protection and conservation of wildlife and their habitats.

The city's certification was announced by the National Wildlife Federation, which is a national organization that promotes the protection and conservation of wildlife and their habitats.

Continued on page 12

Partridge Historic Zone expansion delayed for 6 months

By the Press

The Partridge Historic Zone expansion has been delayed for six months. The city's historic preservation commission has decided to postpone the expansion until next year.

The city's historic preservation commission has decided to postpone the expansion until next year. The commission has decided to postpone the expansion until next year.

The city's historic preservation commission has decided to postpone the expansion until next year. The commission has decided to postpone the expansion until next year.

The city's historic preservation commission has decided to postpone the expansion until next year. The commission has decided to postpone the expansion until next year.

City begins streetlight