University of Texas at Austin announces city partnership for sustainable business

AUSTIN, TEXAS (AP) — The University of Texas at Austin has announced a partnership with the city of Austin to create a sustainable business incubator. The partnership is part of a larger effort to promote sustainable business and innovation in the city. The incubator will provide a space for startups and small businesses to develop and grow. It will also offer a variety of services, including mentorship, training, and access to resources. The partnership is expected to be a major success for the city and the university.
