Checking in on the Behavioral Urgent Care Center

By Mike Steely stéelym@knoxfocus.com

The Knoxville Focus recently asked Jerry Vagnier, president and CEO of Helen Ross McNabb Center, how things are going at the Behavioral Health Urgent Care Center. The facility, located just off Western Avenue at 5203 Ball Camp Pike, opened in March following a wellattended ribbon cutting.

cil meets in regular session Tuesday at 6 p.m. in the City-County Building's main assembly room and, among other agenda items, they will discuss permitting goat grazing, controlling sound on sidewalks and two changes involving both malls.

The city code may be changed in a vote to allow temporary goat grazing in the city to control invasive plants on private property. Goats have been used in recent years to control kudzu at Fort Dickerson Park and other places. Now the code may be changed to allow, with a permit, the animals on private lots. The request comes from the office of Sustainability and Amplified sound on city sidewalks and rights-of-way might also be prohibited if an agenda item requested by the Office of Redevelopment passes. Mayshark said some street performers have been using amplifiers, either battery powered or plugged into outside outlets. The prohibition will not affect business patio music which is already regulated.

Two items are on the agenda that could involve them come back to court until their court costs are completely paid.

Why would they do that? What's the big deal? Well, the court has to pay its employees, and one of the main ways they do this is by collecting court costs. Those court costs fund not only the court system, but also the county government and the government always has things it can spend money on so they want to see as much money collected as possible.

Big Ears Festival gets $25,000 from Hotel/Motel Taxes

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

The Big Ears Festival finally received a $25,000 contribution from the Knox County Commission but only after Visit Knoxville came on board as the event's agency. The matter was debated during a recent commission work session because no sponsor was named and some commissioners objected to donating the money directly to the event.

The resolution was rewritten "to be paid to Visit Knoxville." The funds will come from the county's Hotel/ Motel Tax Fund. Commissioner Hugh Nystrom told the other members that the sponsor was added and Commissioner Evelyn Gill said that an education component was added to the event for "musical awareness for children."

The annual March event draws a large attendance to Knoxville and features all types of musical genres, films, performances and visual arts. The city and Visit Knoxville annually contribute funds for the event.

"I would have voted 'No' tonight but it was vetted by Visit Knoxville," Commissioner Carson Dailey said. He said that a direct contribution from the county, without Visit Knoxville, would open a Pandora's Box but now he is "OK with this change."

opposed the contribution explaining that the request should have been made during the budget presentation but the request "showed up in the middle of our term."

"The city gave $25,000 and Visit Knoxville gave $60,000," Commissioner Schoonmaker said, asking if the Hotel/Motel Tax fund "is flat." Finance Director Chris Caldwell said the funds are there and available.

"We can demand receipts," Anders said, adding that Kim Trent of Visit Knoxville is "comfortable with this."

Commissioner Evelyn Gill said the public often doesn't understand the budget process and, "We need to do a better job."

Nystrom said the funding goes to a 501-3-C which must file a report adding, "It's all public information."

Wright said that other events and local attractions know how to request funds. He was the only "No" vote on the funding.

In other action Chairman Randy Smith asked the Rules Committee introduced.

Commissioner Dave Wright to look into procedures for deferring zoning requests, explaining that a "timeline" should be added and asked if an automatic deferral should be granted if requested.

> Commissioner Dailey said that the "Consent" items should be read after other business and asked the Rules Committee to consider it.

> The discussion turned to state representation when Commissioner Anders indicated that he's going to ask the commission to hire a Nashville lobbyist at the close of the budget hearings.

> "We lost big when our Urban Growth Bill lost in Nashville," Anders lamented. A request from the commission to end the Urban Growth policy in Knox County never made it out of committee there and he added, "We've got to get rid of that Urban Growth Plan."

> Busler said the exemption from the plan might have passed "if we had known the bill was down there."

> "We sat down with our state representatives and said it was a priority but no one was down there," Chairman Smith said.

> "No one stood up to talk about it," Busler said of the local state representatives when the bill was

be wise being in the newspaper business, but like much of what Thomas Jefferson said and wrote. it has a lot of truth in it. The media in this country is used to having enormous power and there was a time when the media was able those who whispered about highest peak since 1928. to wield it quite effectively. Much of what has occurred in our culture has been due to the ability of the media, aligned with the entertainment industry and more recently, social media to shape and mold events. We still hear a lot about freedom of the press, yet along with that same freedom comes a certain responsibility. Much of that responsibility has been eroded by thirty-second news reports followed by thirty minutes of analysis. Newspapers especially have always had a point of view and many newspapers were either unabashedly Republican or Democrat, conservative or liberal. The national news represented on television was Using that quote may not a different matter entirely. I don't think any President of the United States has suffered more personal abuse than Donald Trump. I well recall how many on the left huffed that Barack Obama had been vilified by the right, loudly denouncing

Obama having been born in Kenya or the like. Yet those same people who were indignant about the slings and arrows of the far right against Obama are all too willing to believe anything, no matter how base or ridiculous about Trump. One reason the left in this country have become unhinged about Donald Trump's election is they made the erroneous assumption America had fundamentally changed with the election of Barack Obama. Obama's globalist view of the world, his core belief the United States was not the greatest country in the world; in fact, Obama seemed to take the attitude Americans had much to be remorseful about. There were those who swooned over Obama's reputed intelligence and speculated the presidency was not enough of a challenge for him. Some are tempted to forget under Barack Obama the middle class seriously diminished and income inequality reached its

The coverage of Obama during his presidency by the media could be described as nothing less than doting. Jim Acosta, the same gadfly masquerading as a news reporter, gushed Obama's inaugural speech would likely be "one for the ages." Acosta confronted one Tea Party supporter dressed as the Grim Reaper and ridiculing Obama about being "over the top." Evidently, Acosta doesn't think anything is over the top in ridiculing Trump. Barack Obama recently bragged he didn't have any scandals while in the White House. Of course there were scandals during the Obama administration, some of them utterly appalling. The problem was the national media treated them quite differently. Barack Obama demonstrably lied to the American people about Obamacare; the Obama administration repeatedly refused to cooperate with Congressional investigations, rejected Obama's assertion of executive privilege. Obama's attorney general, Eric Holder, became the first Attorney General of the United States to be held in contempt by Congress. Despite the outrage over Donald Trump's executive orders, Barack Obama routinely ignored courts and frequently ruled through executive orders. There was little said by the national media when President Obama sent planes laden with cash to pay a ransom to a terrorist state. Few ever saw the investigative report showing in detail how the Obama administration subverted the efforts of law enforcement officers to derail an international drugtrafficking operation, which was run by Hezbollah, a terrorist organization. Obama officials reputedly understood they were protected to a large extent by either the stupidity or the partisan inclination of reporters. Few reporters even after a judge flatly it was revealed Obama's Justice Department spied on the Associated Press. The Obama DOJ tapped phones and spied on a Fox News reporter, following his movements and reading his emails. There was the Obama DOJ extorting huge settlements from corporations while the money was not deposited into the U. S. Treasury, but rather funneled to ideological and political allies of the presi-

Any criticism or attempt to hold Obama administration officials responsible was decried as either a right wing plot or merely racist. Yet we've reached the point where employees of President Trump, his family members, and even those who voted for him are demeaned and dehumanized by people who claim to be paragons of compassion. Jim Acosta can whine all he likes that Donald Trump has wounded the media and the First Amendment. No, Jim, you and your said little, if anything, when colleagues did that yourself

At-Large District 10 candidates answer Focus questions

Compiled by Mike Steely

The Knoxville Focus is asking all the contested Knox County Commission candidates several questions. The race for At-Large Seat 10 has Democrat Tori Griffin and Republican Larson Jay facing off to replace Commissioner Bob Thomas. The Generals Election is August 2nd and Early Voting starts July 13th.

Answers are printed in alphabetical order based on the candidate's last

Why are you running?

Tori Griffin: Government impacts us more at home. Government can't fix everything, but there are some ways that it can improve the lives of ordinary citizens in a major way. By bringing livable wage jobs, working to give our students a world class education, keeping housing affordable and ensuring the safety our neighborhoods, these are tangible ways to improve the quality of life for everyone. These are local issues that everyone can get behind regardless of political affiliation, class, race, sex or religion. Our county is growing, quicker than anyone could ever imagine and we need leadership that will bring bold and innovative ideas to grow our economy. I believe I am that person. I'm running to represent all that's ready for the future. Larson Jay: I am running for Knox County Commissioner because I want to be part of the big-picture vision for a growing and prosperous Knox County. I believe I have a unique opportunity to become a more formal servant leader during a time when new, experienced and educated leaders are needed more than ever. Additionally, I believe who governs matters and public service should be selfless not self-serving. I am working hard to bring passionate (but rational), thoughtful leadership to residents and to make Knox

County a stronger place

Knox County Commission. How do you feel about a need to raise property taxes?

Tori Griffin: Recently I attended a community meeting in Powell. A developer plans on building a new subdivision and the residents are concerned about additional traffic in has an elected body of repan already congested area. Many expressed the need to have a particular road widened. A representative from MPC (Metropolitan Planning Commission) explained to those in attendance that it would cost $2 million per lane, per mile to widen any road in the County. That's $4 million for one mile. Currently, the capitol development fund only has $12 million. The county is projected to grow by 100,000 residents in 10-15 years.

We will need to improve our infrastructure, hire more officers to keep us safe, hire more teachers, pay off our debt, and prepare for the future. There's a cost that comes with that. I don't believe it's too much to ask citizens to invest in their county to improve the quality of life for all.

Larson Jay: I am a firm believer that our low tax rate is a positive factor in the quality of life in Knox County and an attraction to people / businesses looking to relocate to and expand within our community. If Knox County should have a revenue deficiency and does not have the resources needed to properly support our citizens or allow for proper levels of investment. I would first examine all non-essential spending, programs and support services before considering any new taxes. I do believe we will continue to grow our commercial and residential tax base, but at current levels, these natural growth levels are only sufficient to maintain our County as it is today. Much depends on who our next Mayor is and the priorities and vision that person sets forth, and until that's decided, we simply can't know what our financial model will look like. Should the commission have a larger say in how schools operate?

Tori Griffin: Because a budget goes toward educashould have some input in I believe it's the Commission's role to grow our econresentatives (school board) that have the responsibility of public education for our citizens. The school board and Superintendent of Knox County Schools lay out the education priorities and present them to the mayor and commission for funding. County Commission is legally restricted to approving funding without additional oversight and managerial input. I would like to see greater communication and partnership between Commission and the school board, but until the legal relationship is different, I don't see much changing in each governing body's roles and responsibilities.

How do you feel about face-to-face visits at the county jail?

Tori Griffin: The County and tech companies shouldn't be making money off the backs of inmates. It costs $6 for 30 minutes (in Knox County) and requires families to have updated tablets, phones, and/or computers to video chat with their loved ones. It adds an additional financial burden to families who are already cash strapped with legal fees, and quite frankly it's inhumane. Studies have shown that inmates who have a strong family support system are less likely to return to jail. Fifty cents of every dollar paid goes to the county general fund. I believe we can find better ways to increase the general fund that doesn't impose an unfair tax to families. Larson Jay: understanding is the current system of using technology to allow inmates visitation in a virtual environment has been a successful, low-cost tool that's helped alleviate staffing shortages within the County Sheriff's Office. Additionally, the current visitation system is safer for our law enforcement officers and allows for a personal visitation for family members who live far large portion of the County from our community. After the program is in place for tion, County Commission a period of time, I would recommend evaluating it how funds are allocated. and gaining feedback from The day-to-day operations, all parties to determine curriculum, and administra- its effectiveness and tive roles should not be the bring those factors into concern of the Commission. determining its ongoing use. I would also be open to new programs that pair omy so that the education traditional face-to-face visitation with rehabilitation programs where inmates and their family members can come together in a professional setting to build better long-term outcomes for all parties.

Do you have a favorite to become Commission Chair?

Tori Giffin: Carson Dailey Larson Jay: The Knox County Commission has the potential to change dramatically in the coming months. Depending on who's elected to new positions within our local government, re-elected in current Commission seats, or new Commission members are elected / appointed, there's no way to determine the makeup of the body and the leadership needs going forward.

What committees are you interested in serving?

Tori Griffin: Joint Education Committee. Community Committee, Development Corp Board

Larson Jay: As a new member of County Commission, I believe my education and experience would be best suited for the Community Action Committee, Visit Knoxville Committee, Retirement and Pension Board, Parks and Recreation Board, Audit Committee and Emergency Communications Board. However, I will gladly serve in whatever capacity the Commission Chair might ask of me and where I can be most helpful to Knox County.

Family objects to Horner Bridge moniker

By Mike Steely steelym@knoxfocus.com

Knox County Commissioners got an earful from the landowners on Pedigo Road last week. In March a bridge along the rural route was dedicated to the late Mary Lou Horner, one of the first women elected to the commission and a community and political leader. While Horner certainly deserves recognition for her service the lady, according to Janet Clark, never represented the Pedigo Road area and the naming of the bridge over Bull Run Creek there should be named for the Clark family. Pedigo Road runs from East Emory Road through rural North Knox County to just beyond Norris Freeway. Janet Clark spoke during Public Forum at Tuesday's meeting of the commission and recalled the history of the E. O. Clark family. She said the Clarks twice donated the land for a bridge and owns the land on both ends of the bridge. She said the family maintains the bridge and even removes graffiti there when a local church does baptisms in the creek.

"E.O. Clark was a teacher, principal, justice, constable, community leader and deacon in the Pleasant Hill Baptist Church," she said.

"Mary Lou was all about beautification," she said, adding that the Horner probably would not appreciate a plague with her name on it in the middle of a pasture.

"She would be spinning in her grave," Clark said, explaining that she feels Horner should have recognition but not at that location.

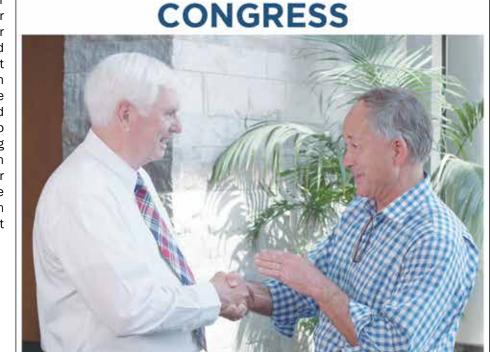

"Everyone knows it as the Clark Bridge, it should be named the E. O. Clark Memorial Bridge," she told the Commissioner Charles Busler said that "maybe somewhere down the road we can have a Mary Lou Horner plaque in the Fountain City Park." He said before names are attached to county landmarks, the individual's legacy to their community should be con-

"This is a great example of people who take care of their community. Mary Lou would not be upset about this at all," said Commissioner Bob Thomas, adding, "We can all get together and make this work out."

What can you say about a 60-year-old family restaurant? How about its great food, great service and a great history of family owners has helped this special place survive and thrive through the decades.

Owner Jimmy Brinias told The Focus that the Original Louis' Restaurant and Drive-In is surviving the Broadway and I-640 construction. The business has a history of survival and family ownership. The Brinias family purchased the Italian restaurant in 1976 with a partner and suffered a fire in 1988. Then the Broadway interchange on the Knoxville bypass took their building and they found another building just up the street on Old

Plans for the current highway construction gave the family a scare when first proposed but eventually the widening of Dutch Valley Road was moved closer to I-640 and their location was safe.

Today Jimmy and wife Tammy, his stepson Michael Adams and his brother-in-law Jeff Foster offer friendly family service along with Louis' staff of 50. They are open 11 a.m. until 10 p.m. every day except Monday.

The menu offers a wide variety of options but Brinias says spaghetti is the absolute favorite, saying, "We go through 600 to 700 pounds of noodles each week."

"Our onion rings are immensely popular," he added. The restaurant also offers pizza, steak, salads, sandwiches and much more. Jimmy said he hand cuts the choice Creek Stone beef.

The restaurant has been so popular that a number of celebrities have dined there. Among those are Kenny Chesney and David Letterman. Jimmy said he was delighted when Letterman mentioned the restaurant on the his late night television talk show.

While local residents love the lunch at Louis' people from all over the area come for supper.

Louis' Restaurant has room for 175 people and a banquet room that seats sixty. What's a bit unusual is that the restaurant continues to have drive-in dining with curb service. Jimmy says many people phone in their orders and pick it up at the curb, to take it home or eat in their car.

"I've done everything here," Jimmy said. He began working at the restaurant for his father, Gus, busing tables and anything he was asked to do. He said the restaurant always closes the week of July 4th, giving the employees time off and giving the family a week to catch up with things in the restaurant.

The nearby road construction has concerned the Brinias family but they've stayed at it, serving their customers with great food and service. They are looking forward to the end of construction and, in the meantime, welcome their friends and customers.

Jimmy said that after the current construction is done the family plans to renovate the restaurant inside and out.

The Original Louis' Restaurant and Drive-In is located at 4661 Old Broadway. You can find them on the internet at "theoriginallouis.com" or call them at (865) 688-4121.

Bill Brock of Tennessee

Pages from the Past

By Ray Hill rayhill865@gmail.com

The transformation of Kennedy administration turning Tennessee from a solidly Democratic state to a two-party state belongs to the candidacies of three men: Howard Baker, Bill Brock and Winfield Dunn. Perhaps Bill Brock is less well remembered than either Howard Baker or Winfield Dunn because he never returned to Tennessee to live after establishing residency in Maryland. Yet for those Tennesseans who do recall Bill Brock in Tennessee, they remember him fondly.

William E. Brock, III was born into a prominent family in Chattanooga, Tennessee. William E. Brock, once a tobacco salesman, borrowed $4,000 and had built one of the most successful candy companies in the world and invented the chocolate covered cherry, a delicacy that is still popular today. Will Brock served for a brief time in the United States Senate, having been appointed when Senator Lawrence D. Tyson died in the summer of 1929. Brock retired from the Senate in 1931 and returned to his home and business in Chattanooga. Will Brock's boys, William E. Jr. and Richard, eventually ran the family business and followed the example of their grandmother and were involved in local philanthropic efforts. Bill Brock attended McCallie School and went on to Washington and Lee University and first Congressional campaign, "When I got out of the service in 1956, I had a little mustering out pay in my pocket, so I decided to work as a Democrat (that's right, Democrat) for Eisenhower." Brock remained a Democrat in 1960 when he campaigned for Richard Nixon who carried Tennessee against John F. Kennedy. Brock remembered, "I started working for Nixon, but before the campaign was over I was a Young

By 1962, Bill Brock was running for office. Brock announced as a candidate for Congress from Tennessee's Third District, which included Chattanooga. The incumbent was James B. Frazier, Jr., the son of a Tennessee governor and U.S. senator. Frazier was a Democrat and a member of perhaps the most powerful committee in the House of Representatives: the Ways and Means Committee. Stately, silver-haired, and courtly, Jim Frazier represented a different era and his style and politics were little appreciatwarmed to the candidacy of Wilkes Thrasher, Jr. Thrasher was also the scion of a political family as his father had been a popular county judge from Hamilton County and one didn't have to look far for landmarks bearing the name of the elder Wilkes Thrasher; there was a school and a bridge named for the old judge. Forty-one years old and outgoing, Wilkes Thrasher was a stark contrast to the aging congressman. J. B. Frazier had been opposed Medicare, while Thrasher embraced it. While Frazier's stand won him the support of most of the physicians inside his Congressional district, it did nothing to endear him to liberals and Tennessee's senators, Estes Kefauver and Albert Gore, quietly lined up behind Wilkes elected in 1948 to succeed Estes Kefauver when the latter was elected to the United States Senate, was ailing and barely campaigned at all. Wilkes Thrasher, Jr. campaigned at a frenetic pace and won the Democratic primary by under 300 votes. Democrats across Tennessee were elated by Thrasher's victory, considering it a victory for the Kennedy administration. Many of those same Democrats were glad to see the departure of Jim tually every issue facing the served a stint in the U.S. Frazier, whom they consid-country. Much of the media tics and recalled during his It seemed inconceivable that Thrasher could lose the general election, as the Republicans had not elected a congressman since the Harding landslide of 1920. Joe Brown had served a single term in the House of Representatives and opted not to seek reelection again. For forty years, the Third District had not elected anything but a Democrat to Congress. Still there were signs things were changing not only in Tennessee, but also subtly inside the Third Congressional District. Richard Nixon had carried the Third District by a handsome majority over John Kennedy in 1960. Kefauver, a liberal, had been elected while Franklin Roosevelt was President of the United States. J. B. Frazier, a conservative, was elected after Roosevelt's death and the passing of the New

> It was clear from the start Bill Brock was not going to run the sort of campaign past Republican nominees had run; Brock's effort was well organized and had at least enough money to compete. Bill Brock later remembered there was barely anyone over thirty working in his first Congressional a debate in the fall campaign that become quite contentious. The young businessman shrewdly perceived the Kennedy administration might not be as popular inside the Third District as some Democrats might have believed. At the debate, Brock immediately asked, "Are we going to have a representative of the people of Tennessee in Congress - - - or are we going to have a representative of the (Kennedy) administration?" Thrasher retorted Brock "will be a rubber stamp of the favored few." Wilkes Thrasher also persisted in referring to Brock as "my rich young opponent." Brock shot back that he was not at all ashamed of his family's productivity; quite to the contrary, he was "proud of it."

Bill Brock and Wilkes Thrasher, Jr. presented voters with a clear choice as they disagreed about virvative", while representing Thrasher as a young idealist, even though Bill Brock was a decade younger. Not surprisingly, Brock and Thrasher disagreed about taxes. Brock was outspoken in his belief income taxes should be reduced by a minimum of 15%, which he believed would "offer every American citizen an opportunity to keep more of his own hardearned money in his own pocket." While Thrasher wasn't openly advocating for higher taxes, he spoke in generalities, saying, "... we can expand opportunity and freedom just as we expand the physical assets we inherit." Thrasher said he thought by doing so it would allow future generations the ability to "enjoy greater freedom and opportunity than we enjoy today."

Eventually Tennessee Democrats realized Bill Brock represented a very real threat and while outwardly confident, began pouring resources into the Third District congressional race. The election of Bill Brock would represent not merely the election of one more Republican congressman, but might also signal that Tennessee was evolving into a truly two-party state and the Thrasher, Jr. faced off in Thrasher, Jr. Thrasher was sent to Trinidad by appointment of President John F. Kennedy along with a delegation to celebrate that nation's independence. Brock noted Thrasher's appointment was "strictly a political move by President Kennedy." The young Republican added Wilkes Thrasher seemed to be scurrying "at every opportunity to the White House to get his instructions." Thrasher replied he would gladly "accept any honor conferred on me at any time by the President of the United States." Thrasher tartly added, "I don't believe the voters of the district will be swayed by a Brock candy bar." Brock disputed the notion he was an archconservative, explaining, "I'm a conservative, but I don't like the word. In some ways, I agree with Barry Goldwater, but the trouble with Goldwater is that he doesn't come up with any I'm not so old that I think any problem is insoluble, and my principles are conservative." It was a concise explanation of Bill Brock's political philosophy. For the remainder of his public career, Brock would eagerly offer solutions to problems, oftentimes to the dismay of his own party. Bill Brock explained he did not propose to go to Congress merely to fight John Kennedy and the New Frontier. "... I won't go to Washington and say I'm against all of President Kennedy's program, because I'm not," Brock said. "I don't agree with a lot of things he does and the way he does them, but I'm not the arch-conservative that some people are saying I am."

Soft spoken, frequently intense when discussing issues, the chain-smoking Bill Brock was difficult for many voters to perceive as a wild man or Neanderthal. Brock appeared to be exactly what he was: a young businessman and family man, which voters could relate to. Worse still for partisan Democrats, Bill Brock sounded reasonable.

a different approach; a trial lawyer by profession, Thrasher said, "I tell the Thrasher emphasized his support for President Kennedy. "I'm for the majority of President Kennedy's program, although I won't say I go along with it 100 percent." Thrasher's possible disagreements with Kennedy policies were vague, saying, "But the President might favor, say, a pass when I would want to run a play around the right end."

Brock and Thrasher debated again, which was carried over television. Once again, neither spared the other and Thrasher, a vocal supporter of Medicare, demanded Brock reveal any connections between his campaign and the American Medical Association. Brock put Thrasher on the defensive with the support the Democrat was receivreasonable alternatives. In ing from organized labor. some ways, I'm like Nelson Thrasher stoutly denied he Navy. As the general election came to a close, Senator Estes Kefauver spent considerable time inside his old congressional district on behalf of Wilkes Thrasher. Perhaps the most popular Democrat in the Third District, Kefauver did all he could to help elect Thrasher. As Democrats became concerned about the race, Republicans grew increasingly excited about the possibility Bill Brock would win. Democrats were shocked by some defections from their ranks who openly supported Brock. Some defections were expected, especially those Democrats who had been strong supporters of Congressman J. B. Frazier; others like Hugh Abercrombie, a leader in Frank Clement's bid to reclaim the governorship were a blow to Wilkes

Thrasher. Democrats rallied around Thrasher in the final days of the campaign, covering five cities inside the Third District, while the "Brock Bandwagon" made a tour of nine stops beginning in Cleveland and ending in Dunlap, Tennessee. Thrasher, Jr. Election Day left the Democrats stunned as Bill Brock eked out a victory over Wilkes Thrasher, Jr. Brock won with 47,604 votes to 45,597 votes for Thrasher. Brock won six of the eleven counties comprising the Third Congressional District and beat Thrasher decisively inside Hamilton County. The Nashville Tennessean's veteran political columnist, Joe Hatcher, sourly attributed Brock's victory less to the young candidate's skillful performance and organizing than the "decaying Democratic organization." Hatcher groused that Thrasher had been "knifed at every turn", especially by those supporting former governor Frank Clement. Hatcher continued to complain in his column, claiming the recent election had shown "no great Republican right back-stabbing among the Democrats." Irrespective of Joe Hatcher's opinion, Bill Brock had accomplished what no other Republican had been able to do since 1920. Brock was soon to be recognized as an expert political organizer with a solid grasp of issues and was well able to articulate his own point of view. Democrats had frequently fought utterly brutal primary campaigns for decades in Tennessee without the slightest threat from Republicans. Clearly, things were changing in Tennessee and Bill Brock appeared to be a young man with a bright future.

Join Mayor Rogero, City Council and Vestal neighborhood residents as they cut a ribbon and celebrate the completion of a 0.3mile Mary Vestal Greenway contact extension, 4119 W. Martin Mill Pike, today at 4 p.m.

The now 0.7-mile greenway links the Martin Mill Pike and Ogle Avenue intersection south to the City's South Knoxville Community Center and Mary Vestal Park on Maryville Pike.

This was one of the first major projects for the City's new Greenways Service Crew, which was announced in December 2016.

The new greenway entrance at Martin Mill Pike is also the site of the new Vestal Gateway Park, which features an arch-covered entrance for the paved greenway. The improvements were made possible largely by members of the Vestal Community Organization.

In the girls singles tournament: Lauren Yoon, a senior, claimed the championship when she breezed past St. George's School's Hannah Grace Howell 6-1, Yoon beat University School of Jackson eighth grader Blair Driver 6-0, 6-2 in the quarterfinals before beating Allison Ivey of Christian Academy of Knoxville (6-2, 6-3) in the semifinals.

Webb's Caroline Ross won a quarterfinal match before being eliminated by Howell in the semifinals.

In girls doubles: Webb tans and Lady Spartans was certain to win a title as Carina Dagotto and Anna Wisniewski defeated Audrey Yoon and Lili Roth 6-2, 6-2 in the championship match.

Seth Armstrong looks out at the football field where he helped Central's strong post-season run in 2017 that carried the Bobcats into the Class 5A state semifinals. Armstrong, Central's male Student-Athlete of the Year, also played baseball and excelled in the classroom. Hailey McDonald's prep career is over, but her story can be a lasting inspiration to those who follow her in the girls' soccer program at Cen-

"She overcame two serious knee injuries in consecutive years early in her soccer career," recalled Coach Bill Mize. "The second injury was a PCL. This is usually a career ender."

McDonald stuck it out and her perseverance plaved a big part in her selection as the school's female Student-Athlete of the Year.

"Hailey refused to consider the possibility she would not play again and overcame the injury to become one of our most productive players ever," said Mize. "Even with the constant pain her injuries brought her, she had a great career."

After being injured her entire freshman season, she returned her sophomore and junior years to earn alldistrict honors. Her senior year she was All-Region first team, All-District first team and the District Midfielder of the Year.

McDonald also was a great leader and team captain.

"Her tempo in practice was as focused and competitive as during our matches," added Coach Mize. "She made others around her work harder by her own example."

Russ Wise, CHS Assistant Principal, Class of 2018, added: "Hailey led the soccer team last season. Her tenacity on the field was the difference in many of the games. Her 'don't quit' attitude helped to drive the team forward all season long. That same attitude helped her to find success in the class room as well."

SETH ARMSTRONG: The senior football and baseball player is Central's male Student-Athlete of the Year.

"Seth is a model student-athlete and charismatic servant leader who possesses the drive, skills and commitment needed to be successful in everything he does," said Bobcats football coach Bryson Rosser.

In football, Armstrong was a running back and linebacker.

"What sets Seth apart is the love for his teammates and the ability to be a mentor to his peers," added Rosser. "Seth leads by example on and off the field and has been a true asset and ambassador to the Central High School community."

Wise also called Armstrong, a

Hutchens, Irish teach basketball at summer camp

Mike Hutchens always looks forward to running his Catholic High School Youth Basketball Camp. It gives the longtime Irish boys basketball coach and a few of his players the opportunity to share the game the love with younger players.

But it does much more.

The three-day camp, held last week at Catholic, also gave the veteran coach a chance to see some of his potential former players. The morning session is for eight, nine and 10-year old players and it affords the youngsters the chance to learn the game from Hutchens, his coaching staff and

HVA team and coaches 'elated' with Unified championship

By Steve Williams

Hardin Valley Academy now has an accomplishment on its athletic resume that can never be matched.

It was the champion of TSSAA's inaugural Unified Track & Field State Invitational.

The HVA team that competed May 24 at MTSU in Murfreesboro included eight members, including four student athletes in special education and four student athletes in regular education curriculums, said Tim Lee, a Special Education teacher at Hardin Valley Academy.

Jennifer Hayes was the coach and Casey Queener the assistant coach.

Lee's role included organizing the team and applying for participation based on the criteria set by TSSAA and Tennessee Special Olympics selected out of 30-plus schools,"

When the competition ended and Hardin Valley was crowned champion, there was a celebration.

"The team and coaches were elated," said Lee. "It was emotional because this opportunity solidified the respect that any athlete deserves when demonstrating their best efforts and attitude. It also shows that Special Olympics athletes do not have to be locked into stereotypes. It was amazing how this team showed up to win just as any athlete desires and not to be considered 'a winner' before given the chance to compete.

"The most important part of it is the friendships that formed and the desire to continue as a team."

HVA Assistant Principal Kellie Ivens was at the meet to show her support, said Lee.

Positive Signs on Rocky Top

By Alex Norman

Tennessee athletics have been a source of major controversy, internal strife, and nearly constant underachievement for the past decade. There have changes and administrator changes to count on the UT campus, and the winning formula has yet to be devel-

But the times... they are a changin'...

Ever since Phillip Fulmer took over for the flawed John Currie following the great UT football coaching search debacle of November /December 2017, Tennessee hasn't been in the news very much for off the field mistakes and that certainly is a good thing.

Yes, there was a hiccup when head football coach Jeremy Pruitt did away with the autograph sessions that traditionally preceded the Orange & White Game. But his trips on the Big Orange Caravan tours eased many of the worries from fans that Pruitt won't make those connections.

Last week there were two announcements made that showed that Tennessee truly is moving in the right direction, and they involved their two revenue sports, football and men's basketball.

Let's start with football. Back on May 24th, Tennessee linebacker Darrin Kirkland Jr. announced on twitter that he was going to be a graduate transfer, and would have two years of eligibility remaining to play at another school. It would be a brutal blow for the Vols defense as they start to make the transition from the 4-3 alignment to the 3-4.

games as a true freshman ing. "I am very grateful for more...

in 2015, but missed much my recent opportunities of 2016 and all of 2017 due to injury. He missed all of spring practice, but was expected to be ready for the fall camp.

But four days later, Gridbeen too many coaching iron Now's John Brice reported that there had been a change of heart, and Kirkland would stay at Tennessee. Over the Memorial Day holiday weekend, Brice reported that Kirkland, his parents, and Pruitt had a meeting.

"I don't think that Darrin was unhappy in any way," Pruitt said on Tuesday, May 29th at the SEC spring meetings in Destin. "He just wanted to see if there was any possibility that he might want to further his career, and he decided he wanted to stay at Tennessee. We met and talked, and he's excited to stay at Tennessee. He wants to finish what he started. Darrin is a smart guy, and he's been through some tough injuries, and, to me, that's probably the good thing about the grad transfer rule is when a guy does graduate, if he does want to move on, then he has an opportunity to do that."

There are spots on defense where depth is a concern, but with the return of Kirkland, the Vols linebacking corps with Daniel Bituli, Quart'e Sapp and Will Ignont also returning could turn into a strength for Tennessee.

Kirkland's return was one bit of good news for the football program. Tennessee's men's basketball team got some even better news last week when forward Admiral Schofield said that he would be returning for his senior season.

He made his future plans Kirkland started ten known with a twitter post-to compete and display my talents in front of NBA personnel. I have learned so much through this NBA Draft evaluation process and am looking forward to improving the areas of my game that need it while also improving as a man. With that said, I'm happy to announce that I'll be returning to Tennessee for my senior season, and I am focused and hungry to once again chase championships with my teammates!"

Schofield averaged 13.9 points and 6.4 rebounds a game last season. He was projected to be picked in the second round in next month's NBA draft.

"I think what he's gone through is gonna really help him this year and help his teammates," said Tennessee basketball coach Rick Barnes at the SEC spring meetings. "He's a guy that we look at for leadership, and my dialogue with him after each one of his tryouts or workouts was really good."

With Schofield back, the Vols return every key piece from the squad that shared the SEC title with Auburn a year ago. Tennessee has been seen in the top five in preseason polls, and one of the highest anticipated seasons since the Bruce Pearl era is on the horizon.

The decisions of Kirkland and Schofield will hopefully benefit both student-athletes this fall and in the years to come. For Tennessee, it is yet another sign that things are turning around. These are two high profiled guys that want to be at UT. They could have left, but they decided to stick around.

Samson in the Swamp

quit listening all together. Most folks I know stay at least partially engaged in the events of the day, but sometimes I wonder. There is an excuse for being uninformed. Though we live in the Information Age, we nonetheless exist in the era of disinformation, and this turns people off.

For years I've been writin our country. If you are unaware of this great divide then I believe you are uninformed. Even the TV talking heads acknowledge - and feed - the polarization. But now, this politicalization permeates virtually every aspect of our culture and civilization.

I once believed that facts are facts. Sergeant Joe Friday on the TV sitcom Dragnet famously asked for, "Just the facts, Ma'am." I now realize that all facts are conditional because

Who do you listen to there is inherent observathese days? Perhaps you've tional bias in all humans. And these days all "facts" are politicized.

My old professor, Rufus Fears, said that effective leaders are able to present a clear vision, they have a moral compass, operate from a bedrock of principles and are able to gain consensus to realize their vision. Examples are Winston Churchill and ing about the Civil War FDR. Some might argue that these leaders existed in simpler times where the evils of Naziism and Japanese imperialism or Great Depression were more obvious than the political fault lines of our day. Nowadays you even have to define the context of "moral compass," the notion of "principles" and who decides.

> I am not a Biblical scholar, but I recognize the wisdom inherent in biblical stories. The founders orah, Gideon, Samuel and of our country believed in the lessons of history. Apparently, our leaders do not because, like ancient Greeks and Romans, they continue to launch "preemptive" wars in the Middle East and around the world with disastrous consequences. I don't believe modern man is inherently any different than humans of antiquity. We have more technology, we live longer and grow taller, but I do not believe we are wiser or nobler. In fact, because we ignore the lessons of history we are doomed to repeat them, paraphrasing George Santayana.

Abraham Lincoln was the first Republican president. He was pilloried and lampooned by the press. Like Valerie Jarrett and Sarah Sanders, Lincoln endured scurrilous attacks on his appearance. He persevered and won the Civil War, preserving the Union. You could say that he made America great again.

"In those days, Israel the desperation of the had no king; everyone did as they saw fit" (Judges 21:25). In the 13th century BC, the various tribes of the ancient Hebrews occupied the land of current day Israel. Their leaders were known as judges, and led the people against various Canaanite tribes and Philistines. You may remember some judges like Deb-

Samson. For a while the people remembered that God was their King and they prospered, but they forgot and disastrous consequences resulted.

Samson was a strong, but imperfect man. His fanfare (Lee Greenwood's strength lay in the locks of his hair because he had been consecrated to God as a Nazirite - not a Nazarene. When he confided to the Philistine temptress, Delilah, the source of his strength, he broke the covenant with God. God's presence left him and he was captured by the Philistines, blinded and imprisoned. The story ends with Samson's prayer and restoration of his strength to vanguish the enemies of the people.

Becky has been itching to attend a Trump rally, so when we heard the President would be in Nashville last week, I decided to tag along with three other redblooded American women and see for myself what it was all about. I was the unofficial representative of the Knoxville Focus, so I was not issued a media pass. I stood in the drizzle with thousands of other people, gathered to go through security. We were thankful that Marsha Blackburn's campaign passed out plastic rain ponchos for everyone in our seats were great and we enjoyed watching people, listening to music and various speakers and munching popcorn as we awaited the main event. Then, with a bit of musical Proud to Be an American), the President strode out, sporting his characteristic red tie, smiling broadly and interacting with people.

His speech was extemporaneous and passionate. Trump exudes confidence and doesn't need notes or a Teleprompter because his message comes from the heart. He is a gifted communicator, though his rhetoric is not lofty. He believes in America and is able to communicate this. And a personal touch is somehow delivered to individuals as he points to people in the crowd, recognizing some by name and frequently applauding individuals or groups. I have heard many speeches, but this one delivered in person was palpably different. I won't bore you with the details of the President's message because you've undoubtedly already heard sound bites. However, as I sat there amidst thousands of supporters, I thought of "big hair" and imagined America's Samson fighting the Philistines of the Washington Swamp.

As I have written before, The arena quickly filled, Trump was not my first or second choice for President. However, I am now convinced he's the right man, at the right time to lead our country. I might wish the man from Queens was a bit more genteel in his speech and tweets, but he is struggling against "the rulers and powers and forces of darkness" (Ephesians 6). The ruling class of Washington, the media, academia, Hollywood, Pelosi, Schumer and the rest of the Democrats, the leaders of the intelligence agencies, RINOs and never-Trumper's are all working to delegitimize - or end - the duly elected 45th president of the United States. Language is not genteel in the trenches, in street fights and civil wars.

The Master once said that "If anyone is ashamed of me and my message, the Son of Man will be ashamed of that person when he returns in his glory" (Luke 9:26). After personally measuring our leader, I am now a Trump supporter. I resolve to do what I can to help this Samson tear down the Philistine Temple of Washington's Swamp and Make America Great Again.

A Time for Everything

We could

bе

By Mark Brackney, Minister of the Arlington Church of Christ

wealthy, prosperous, and spiritually strong if we only knew when and what to do with our lives. The author of Ecclesiastes knows the value of timing. There are read the Bible who are familiar with Ecclesiastes 3:1-8, due to one of the songs of a 60's rock group called the Byrds. They put these words to music with the song: "Turn, Turn,

All of the major moments in life are mentioned in this text. Each of these fourteen lines gives an opposite pair of actions: a time to be born and a time to die, a time to plant and a time to uproot, a time to kill and a time to heal, a time to tear down and a time to build, a time to weep and a time to laugh, a time to mourn and a time to dance, a time to scatter stones and a time to

and a time to refrain, a time to search and a time to give up, a time to keep and a time to throw away, a time to tear and a time to mend, a time to be silent and a time to speak, a time to love and a time to hate. a time for war and a time for peace.

What time is it now? The writer tells us, "He has made everything beautiful in its time. He has also set eternity in the hearts of men; yet they cannot fathom what God had done from beginning to end" (Ecclesiastes 3:11). In order to have a good life, we think we need to know God's timetable, for God has made everything beautiful in its time. But the problem with this is that we can't know God's timetable. We can't know the right time for everything. This passage shows our inability to figure out God's timing.

The word translated "eternity" is the key word. God has placed in our hearts a longing to understand the big picture. We want to know things like: What more is there for me to do with my life? When do I act on this important decision? We don't always know. God is the only one who knows, but it doesn't appear that he is letting us in on the secret. We are not alone. The disciples wondered about timing: "Then they gathered around him and asked him, 'Lord, are you at this time going to restore the kingdom to Israel?' He said to them: 'It is not for you to know the times or dates the Father has set by his own authority" (Acts 1:6-7). Job wondered: "Why does the Almighty not set times for judgment? Why must those who know him look in vain for such days?" (Job 24:1). God never gave a direct answer to Job. Instead God showed his power. God basically says: "I'm God, and you're not. My ways are greater than your understanding. Trust me."

This passage in Ecclesiastes is not meant to direct us to knowing the exact timing to act in these various ways. The timing and consequences of our actions is unknown, but we should not despair. God is in control. But we struggle wanting to be like God, just like what happened in the Garden of Eden with Adam and Eve. We want to see eternity as God sees it. We want to know the time. So we eat from our own trees of knowledge, attempting to try and understand life and manipulate it. We need to let go and trust God and his timing, knowing that God is the one who holds the past, present, and future.

Windsor Gardens Assisted Living hosted its Annual Mother's Day Tea Party last month. Everyone tasted an assortment of teas, complete with honey, lemon, and sugar cubes along with an assortment of tea biscuits. Then the ladies were served chicken salad and pimento cheese sandwiches, fresh fruit and dip, cheese and crackers, and mini quiche. The group ended the meal with table-side made strawberry shortcake.

Tick season is news report, ticks are extremely prevalent in East

mon to see some tick action through the winter months.

After speaking to many of my friends, several indicated that they or their children have already had ticks on them this season. Therefore, let's focus on ways of preventing ticks.

According to a recent like areas where there is a trimming grass shorter, (such as 1,302 cases in lot of moisture. They love those shady wooded areas, areas of tall grass, bushes, trails with lots of vegetation, around stone walls and where there is a lot of leaf litter.

> Keeping your yard clean and free of leaf piles will help reduce the tick population as well as keeping your lawn mowed and controlling weeds. Another good preventative is keeping repairs done to the entry points of your house to discourage possible tick hosts from entering.

Ticks thrive in landscaping that has plenty of crevices for them to hide. First, be aware that ticks Pruning trees and shrubs, ing overwatering will help make your yard less friendly for these pests. According to the UT Extension Department, three kinds of ticks are frequently encountered removing excessive brush and fallen leaves and avoid-

around homes or in recreation areas in Tennessee. These are the American dog tick, lone star tick and the brown dog tick. Other less common tick species can also be found in the area. The American dog tick can transmit Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever and it was reported that in 2016 there were 581 cases in Tennessee. Tennessee is second in the nation in terms of number of diagnosed cases of Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever.

concerned about Lyme Disease. Lyme Disease incidents in Tennessee are uncommon but do occur. According to the CDC there were 20 suspected cases in Tennessee in 2015. In comparison to other states Massachusetts), Tennessee has a very low incidence. Lyme Disease is caused predominantly by blacklegged ticks also know as deer ticks which are fairly uncommon in Ten-One of the most interesting facts that I learned in my research was that some people after having been bitten by a lone star tick become allergic to red meat. The allergy presents as hives, swelling, vomiting and diarrhea after eating red meat and can be a lifelong reaction. As you can see, ticks can indeed be dangerous. If you do have a tick bite, call your physician and seek immediate treatment.

From a gardening perspective, the best advice Most people tend to be is to try and prevent them in the first place as earlier indicated to keep you yard clean (free of leaf litter, etc.) and mow frequently. Because the ticks like moisture, if you mow frequently and have a sunny yard, the ticks will dry out.

nessee Arboretum Society will sponsor the popular MOTH-er's Night Out program to learn about moths and other nocturnal insects on Saturday, June 9th from 8:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. at the UT Arboretum Visitors Center which is located at 901 S. Illinois Ave. (HWY 62) in Oak Ridge.

The University of Ten-

Have you ever wondered about what kind of insects are out hunting and eating while you sleep snugly in your bed at night? Come learn about these fascinating creatures with naturalist Kris Light. Why should you spend a Saturday night learning about moths? Moths are one of the most diverse species on earth with more than 11,000 moth species in the United States alone!

Their colors and patterns make them masters of camouflage. Moths are both important pollinators and a food source for other animals. After an introductory program in the Visitors Center, we will venture outdoors to check our moth attraction sheets to observe the insects that have been attracted by the black lights.

Bring your camera, your UT Arboretum Society to hold MOTH-er's Night Out friends and your kids as well as a magnifying glass, a flashlight and a desire to learn about these fascinating critters! Bring your mother too! This program is appropriate for all ages.

This is a free program offered by the University of Tennessee Arboretum Society. For more information call 865-483-7277.
