

Outreach workers for homeless may be funded

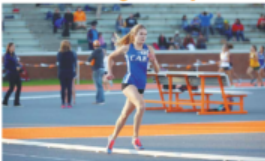

By Mike Smith
@mikesmith101

The University of Utah is being asked by the community development department to authorize $250,000 for nine new outreach workers to help homeless students with their education. The idea is to have these outreach workers employed to work with homeless students who are struggling in school. The idea is to have these outreach workers employed to work with homeless students who are struggling in school.

The Utah community development department is asking for $250,000 to hire nine outreach workers to help homeless students with their education. The idea is to have these outreach workers employed to work with homeless students who are struggling in school.

The Utah community development department is asking for $250,000 to hire nine outreach workers to help homeless students with their education. The idea is to have these outreach workers employed to work with homeless students who are struggling in school.

Leading the way!

Arkansas State of the University students of Arkansas State University are leading the way in creating the 100th year of the Arkansas State University. They received the 100th year of Arkansas State University and signed with Arkansas State University. They are part of the Arkansas State University students of Arkansas State University.

Complaint against Brad Anders dismissed by ethics committee