

Islands and Navy Differ on Taxes, Investigations

By [Name]

WASHINGTON, May 1 — The U.S. Navy and the U.S. Coast Guard are at odds over the future of the U.S. Virgin Islands, a U.S. territory in the Caribbean. The Navy wants to build a new naval base on the island of St. John, while the Coast Guard wants to build a new port on the island of St. Thomas. The two agencies are also at odds over the future of the U.S. Virgin Islands' tax system. The Navy wants to keep the current system, while the Coast Guard wants to change it.

The Navy and the Coast Guard are both part of the U.S. Department of Defense. The Navy is responsible for the U.S. Navy's fleet, while the Coast Guard is responsible for the U.S. Coast Guard's fleet. The two agencies are both responsible for the U.S. Navy's and the U.S. Coast Guard's operations in the U.S. Virgin Islands.

The Navy and the Coast Guard are both responsible for the U.S. Navy's and the U.S. Coast Guard's operations in the U.S. Virgin Islands. The Navy wants to build a new naval base on the island of St. John, while the Coast Guard wants to build a new port on the island of St. Thomas. The two agencies are also at odds over the future of the U.S. Virgin Islands' tax system.

The Navy and the Coast Guard are both responsible for the U.S. Navy's and the U.S. Coast Guard's operations in the U.S. Virgin Islands. The Navy wants to build a new naval base on the island of St. John, while the Coast Guard wants to build a new port on the island of St. Thomas. The two agencies are also at odds over the future of the U.S. Virgin Islands' tax system.

U.S. Navy and U.S. Coast Guard officials discuss the future of the U.S. Virgin Islands.

The Navy and the Coast Guard are both responsible for the U.S. Navy's and the U.S. Coast Guard's operations in the U.S. Virgin Islands. The Navy wants to build a new naval base on the island of St. John, while the Coast Guard wants to build a new port on the island of St. Thomas. The two agencies are also at odds over the future of the U.S. Virgin Islands' tax system.

Open House Tonight for Magnolia Avenue

By [Name]

WASHINGTON, May 1 — The U.S. Navy and the U.S. Coast Guard are at odds over the future of the U.S. Virgin Islands, a U.S. territory in the Caribbean. The Navy wants to build a new naval base on the island of St. John, while the Coast Guard wants to build a new port on the island of St. Thomas. The two agencies are also at odds over the future of the U.S. Virgin Islands' tax system.

The Navy and the Coast Guard are both part of the U.S. Department of Defense. The Navy is responsible for the U.S. Navy's fleet, while the Coast Guard is responsible for the U.S. Coast Guard's fleet. The two agencies are both responsible for the U.S. Navy's and the U.S. Coast Guard's operations in the U.S. Virgin Islands.

The Navy and the Coast Guard are both responsible for the U.S. Navy's and the U.S. Coast Guard's operations in the U.S. Virgin Islands. The Navy wants to build a new naval base on the island of St. John, while the Coast Guard wants to build a new port on the island of St. Thomas. The two agencies are also at odds over the future of the U.S. Virgin Islands' tax system.

The Navy and the Coast Guard are both responsible for the U.S. Navy's and the U.S. Coast Guard's operations in the U.S. Virgin Islands. The Navy wants to build a new naval base on the island of St. John, while the Coast Guard wants to build a new port on the island of St. Thomas. The two agencies are also at odds over the future of the U.S. Virgin Islands' tax system.