

We talked Becky into an adventurous cruise around the tip of South America. I have asked Mr. Hunley, publisher of The Focus, for a travel budget, but he has yet to get back with me.

This morning, Becky asked me about plans for the day ahead with Rita's sister, Cleo, my daughter and son-in-law, Matt. I told her anything is fine because I don't rush to be somewhere any longer; I'm ancient ruins of Carthage, but at this stage in my life-journey I don't yearn for Cairo or Cathay. I am blessed to know I'm where I am supposed to be. Through all my travels I have never found any place I wanted to live except in my hometown of Knoxville, Tennessee. The Psalmist spoke of this same perspective of time and place when he said, "This is the day the Lord

CNN's Jim Acosta and the radical left. Surprisingly, Portland and Knoxville have similar weather, despite different latitudes. This is because the Japan Current warms the coastal areas of the Pacific Northwest. Portland is much larger than Knoxville, but since it is made up of numerous smaller neighborhoods and communities it doesn't feel like a big city

November midterm election would be about the Kavanaugh hearing, the caravan/illegal immigration issue and the booming economy. Obviously, many Americans see the world differently than me. Several Democrat Senators were defeated as a result of the Kavanaugh debacle, but the economy was not a big issue, perhaps because half of Americans pay no federal Republicans and have not been turned out. It's only fitting that we have divided power in the Congress because we have a divided nation.

As I looked out the window the morning after the election I didn't see anything different. I felt the same as I drove to work the morning after Obama was elected in 2008. The Founders constructed our government with a balance leaders have the same convictions. If reason and conscience, rather than power and party, are the driving forces behind their decisions and those of citizens and believers, we'll be OK, and we will Make America Great Again.

Hobo's Tips for Holiday Success

It seems Halloween kicks off the beginning of a season of too much food, too much drink, too much spending, and way too much of the "ideal holiday season."

season but also a unique viewpoint from the eyes of our pets.

For most of us, the holiday season brings families and friends together with lots of cheer and good tidings. But, the holidays also fill our homes with stress, excitement, sights, sounds, and personalities often changing the dynamics of our happy homes in an instant. For family, and public places, then it's probably not a good idea to include Fido at the company Christmas party. Keep your dog's routines as regular as possible. Strange visitors, overnight guests, loud music, laughter, cheer, food, drinks, and a few high-energy children can tax the nerves of Santa Claus and his reindeers. Be realistic.

- Gifts: You can bet your bottom dollar that Hobo the Wonder Dog and his pack have stockings hanging on the mantle in hopes of squeaky toys and treats filled with Christmas cheer. Remember, it is not about the gifts but more about the time spent together. In reality Hobo couldn't care less about the stocking and more about a hike same schedule will make for a happier holiday season by all.

We might be able to learn something from Hobo the Wonder Dog this holiday season, nothing will take the place of time spent playing fetch or a hike over a hill or through the woods. Our pets are the best examples of the true meaning of Christmas—they do not care
