

Education

Students at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill will receive a $7,000 bonus if they graduate with a degree in special education, according to a new study by the state's Department of Education.

The study, which was conducted by the state's Department of Education, found that students who graduate with a degree in special education are more likely to be employed in the field of special education than those who graduate with a degree in another field.

The study also found that students who graduate with a degree in special education are more likely to be employed in the field of special education than those who graduate with a degree in another field.

The study was conducted by the state's Department of Education, which is responsible for overseeing the state's public education system.

New special education teachers may get $7,000 bonus

Special Education

Students who graduate with a degree in special education will receive a $7,000 bonus, according to a new study by the state's Department of Education.

Education

The study, which was conducted by the state's Department of Education, found that students who graduate with a degree in special education are more likely to be employed in the field of special education than those who graduate with a degree in another field.