

Governor Bill Lee visits South-Doyle to discuss vocational programs

By Heather H. Hester

Governor Bill Lee visited South-Doyle on Tuesday, March 14, to discuss vocational programs. The governor, who is also the state's largest employer, met with South-Doyle's leadership to discuss the state's vocational programs and the challenges facing the workforce.

Lee, who is also the state's largest employer, met with South-Doyle's leadership to discuss the state's vocational programs and the challenges facing the workforce. He also met with South-Doyle's leadership to discuss the state's vocational programs and the challenges facing the workforce.

Lee, who is also the state's largest employer, met with South-Doyle's leadership to discuss the state's vocational programs and the challenges facing the workforce. He also met with South-Doyle's leadership to discuss the state's vocational programs and the challenges facing the workforce.

Lee, who is also the state's largest employer, met with South-Doyle's leadership to discuss the state's vocational programs and the challenges facing the workforce. He also met with South-Doyle's leadership to discuss the state's vocational programs and the challenges facing the workforce.

Continued on page 2

New special education teachers may get $7,000 bonus

Special education teachers who are new to the profession may receive a $7,000 bonus. The bonus is part of a new program that aims to attract more people to the field of special education.

By Heather H. Hester

The new program is part of a new initiative to attract more people to the field of special education. The program is designed to provide a $7,000 bonus to new special education teachers who are hired by the state.

The program is designed to provide a $7,000 bonus to new special education teachers who are hired by the state. The program is designed to provide a $7,000 bonus to new special education teachers who are hired by the state.

Continued on page 2