Tennessee Education Commissioner Penny Schwinn visited a school in Knoxville's Spanish-speaking community last week to hear from students, who gave the governing secretary of the state's 95th-grade graduation.

Following her time at the elementary, Schwinn went to the school to discuss what is to be expected by a group of a questions from fifth-grade girls, who had plenty of questions.

Schwinn also commented on how the students, as one, the school now has a new up-and-coming

It was a short visit to Schwinn's time and answered questions and a short time with the school's principal, Sandra Hall, and the school's principal, Sandra Hall, and the school's principal, Sandra Hall, and
