One of the topics addressed during the League of Women Voters Mayoral Candidate Forum Tuesday night was community policing. Knoxville is currently planning to relocate the police and fire departments to the former St. Mary's hospital just off Broadway. Not all of the six candidates agree with that and each addressed the idea of spreading the police department out through the city rather than one central location.

Eddie Mannis was the first to answer the question and said he believes that a precinct model is "a better way to go." He said putting the police back in the commu-

Indya Kincannon said she supports the community policing model and said that police officers should be paid better. "When I talk to officers about recruiting more officers no one ever says we need a better building."

"Police working in an area have the opportunity to get to know the people in that area," said Michael Andrews. "You get better community input."

Fletcher Burkhardt said he thinks the precinct idea "is great" but said it increases the cost. He also said the police and fire department employees need "proper pay" and to get rid of antiquated rule books. He said that he saw an officer who had to wear long sleeves in hot weather because of a tattoo on his wrist called for more diversity and better mental health training. He said community policing is "helpful."

"We're doing that now with community meetings and building relationship with business owners," said Marshall Stair. He added, "I'm not for the precinct model because the city of Knoxville is not that big. At this time when we're understaffed I don't think that makes sense."

The forum, held at the Knoxville News-Sentinel office, drew a large crowd of supporters and citizens. Questions also included indigent care, affordable housing, hacking threats of city records, Pilots and Tiffs for business tax breaks, attracting minority businesses, and gun violence.
