

PHOTO BY GUY

Knoxville mayoral candidate Eddie Mannix addresses supporters after Tuesday night's primary at the Grande Event Center. Mannix, the top vote getter, will face Indya Kincannon in November's general election.

By Mike Stealy
mikestealy@knoxnews.com

The Knoxville City general election ballot is set and Eddie Mannix will face Indya Kincannon in the race to become the next mayor. Mannix led in both early voting and absentee ballots and ended up Tuesday evening with 30.64% of the vote.

Kincannon edged out Marshall Blair with 29.13% of the vote to Blair's 26.98%.

The real surprise of the evening was Analisa Parker topping the four other candidates in the At Large Seat C race with 29.85%. She pulled more votes that the presumed favorite Amy Mads who came in second in a tight race and received 28.08% of the vote. The two women will face each other in November.

Also in the Seat C race former Commissioner Bob Thomas ran a very close third with 26.35%. Hubert Smith and David Williams both pulled less than 5% each in voter ballots.

Continue on page 4

Reorganization, Ancient Village at commission meeting

By Mike Stealy
mikestealy@knoxnews.com

any time in September prior to their regular meeting that

Council talks pay raise for city judge, sign ordinance, Design Center funds

By Mike Stealy
mikestealy@knoxnews.com

Barring a write-in candidate on the November the council the funds included $25,000 of "in-kind service" by volunteers. He said the Design Center will also