Local residents seeking re-election stamped at the Coryton Community and Senior Center Tuesday night.

County Commissioner Richie Reeder, Knox County Property Assessor John R. Whithead and Knox County Law Clerk candidate David Busch appeared at a community get-together.

One person seeking re-election was absent as Knox County Board of Education member Mike McMillan, who is hospitalized, continues to battle pneumonia. Knoxville Focus Publisher Steve Hurley spoke on behalf of his friend.

Reeder, who is running unopposed for the Eighth District seat on county commission, served as emcee at the dinner, where hot dogs, cole slaw and potato chips were served to community members.

"It has been my pleasure to serve as your county commissioner after replacing Dave Wright (who moved on to the Tennessee State Assembly) and I look forward to serving as your county commissioner for at least the next four years," Reeder said. "I'm probably the least qualified person to run unopposed in this room."

"But that's the way the Good Lord would have it. We're facing an important election. You hear that all the time. The next election is always important. But this election is extremely important. It's important for our nation, our county and our community."

Busch was the one candidate at Tuesday night's meeting who is not an incumbent. He's looking to succeed the term-limited

Wednesday this session items discussed will go on to the regular meeting on February 24.

The school board has the proposed move of the First County Schools system from the Andrew Johnson Building to the TVA Towers on their agenda. That vote, to accept or deny, will determine what the commission will discuss.

Item 14 on the commission agenda is "accepting a memorandum of agreement between the Board of Education regarding relocation of the central offices to the TVA East Tower." Should the school board move to reject the move that item would be made.

The second item on the commission agenda that depends on a school board vote is to approve selling the
