

celebrate Super Tuesday victories

By Alan Lay

Bluck came one step closer to replacing the term-limited and Aversborg as Knox County Law Director as he defeated Cathy Quist Shanks in the Republican Primary on Super Tuesday.

Now, Bluck faces a challenge from Jackson Farmer, Farmer, an Independent, recently entered the race but Bluck is confident that he can prevail in the August general election.

"I'll have to face an Independent who has thrown his hat into the race," said Bluck, who got 60% of the primary vote against Quist Shanks. "But I'm not really worried about it."

"I obviously have to respond to his campaign, but usually when you win the Republican primary in Knox County, you usually win the general election."

Upon accepting the party's nomination, Bluck said that he would be "the people's lawyer," and added, "I look forward to representing the people of Knox County."

He has also agreed to carry on the work started by Armstrong, under whom he served in the Knox County Law Director's Office.

In other races, John R. Whitthead was re-elected to serve as Knox County's Property Assessor. He soundly defeated Tina Marshall, picking up more than 75% of the vote.

He'll run unopposed in August, but said that he was glad that his election process has finally come to an end.

"I'm excited," said Whitthead, who will serve a fourth term as property assessor. "I'm glad we can all get back to living our lives again. I'm glad that we can all sleep at night again."

"And I'm glad that I won't have to work another pool."

On Knox County Commission, Carson Daley, Terry Hill, Richie Seaker and Grant Rosenberg all ran unopposed Tuesday night.

Daley (District 2), Hill (District 4) and Seaker (District 6), who did not attend Tuesday night's election party at the Crown Plaza, will all be unopposed again in August.

Rosenberg will face Democrat Courtney Burnett this summer to replace the seat, being vacated by the term-limited Michele Caringer.

In District 5, John Schoonmaker, the incumbent, edged Clayton Wood in the primary. Schoonmaker will face Democrat Kimberly Peterson in August.

In the District 4 race, Kyle Wood beat Scott Broyles in the primary and he'll face Todd Fournager in the general election.

Kyle Hudson will be the next District 3 Criminal Court Judge as he defeated Wesley Stone in the primary.

Eric Sutton defeated Rhonda Lee in the primary and will face Stuart Gurdell, an Independent, in August for the Public Defender office.

A ceremony is planned and the monuments will be on the Broadway side of the school.

This Thursday at 5:30 p.m., WGBH Channel 30 will interview four Fulton veterans, two of them who served in Vietnam.
