"They are our front line people we don't think about. They provide an essential service," said Cameron Brooks of Healthy Executives Associates and the Knox County Election Commission.

He was talking about Knoxville Area Transit employees. Brooks had been pondering how he might show them some appreciation and he called Councilman Andrew Roberts. The two men talked about it and decided on a meal for the employees and followed through with the idea Friday.

Brooks and Roberts began raising funds on Facebook and contacted Yassin's Falafel House. "KAT Worker Appreciation Day" was announced and Friday at 11 a.m. Brooks and Roberts met at the restaurant at 706 Walnut Street to pick up individually wrapped and bagged chicken or steak gyros and french fries.

Ventrice Hodge, vice president of the Amalgamated Transit Union, joined the two men in helping to bag the 200 lunches with restaurant owner Yassin Torpe. The staff of the Falafel House spent many hours and effort to prepare and begin bagging the food.

"I know Yassin really wanted to give out to the community," Brooks said.

They worked to coordinate the meals with KAT's

Human Resources Office and delivered the meals to the KAT office on Magnolia Avenue to be given out to employees.

Hodge said the bags of food would be picked up by transit drivers as they report for their work shifts.

Brooks said that a fund raising effort to cover the cost of the food exceeded what was sought and the ran halloff as they loaded two vehicles to deliver a free meal to the KAT workers.

Knoxville Mayor Indya Kincannon's push to create a Human Resources Department passed in a split vote Tuesday. Several citizens called into the Zoom meeting to speak for and against the measure but a 7-2 vote passed the creation of the new department on first reading at Tuesday's city council meeting.

Mayor Kincannon said she hopes the next city council meeting won't be via the internet but live. That meeting could see the second and final reading of the ordinance.

Or, Vice Mayor Hatfield, creation of a new department, said the ordinance was "not written in a cooperative experience."

The 25-year employee also said the creation of a new Human Resources Department moves most other duties to HR where they become the duties of one person appointed by the mayor.

Hatfield said the idea is "the most divisive" she has ever seen and that most of the city employees oppose it. The Civil Service Merit Board voted 3-2 against creation of the HR department.

However, the spokesman for the fire department and the past pres-
