Appointed law director amendment to go on November ballot

A proposed amendment to the state constitution regarding the appointment of a law director is set to be placed on the November ballot. The amendment would allow the governor to appoint a law director to oversee the state's legal affairs.

The amendment is supported by many legal professionals and government officials. They believe that having a law director would improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the state's legal system.

However, some opponents argue that the amendment would give the governor too much power. They believe that the law director should be appointed by the legislature to ensure a balance of power.

The amendment is expected to be a major issue in the November election. Voters will have to decide whether they support the proposed change to the state constitution.
