School board discusses possible changes for 2021-2022 academic year

By Ken Lay

With six weeks remaining in the 2020-2021 school year, the Knox County Board of Education turned its attention to the 2021-2022 academic year at last week's April work session meeting Wednesday night at the Andrew Johnson Building.

For starters, Knox County Schools Superintendent Bob Thomas announced has delayed its window on when parents can decide whether to enroll in virtual learning or in-person instruction.

The reason for the delay is that KCS is awaiting mandates from the state, which are likely to be announced at a called meeting scheduled for today (April 12). The state board of education will meet today to discuss virtual education programming for the upcoming school year, which is slated to begin in Knoxville in August and Thomas said that next year's virtual learning will be much different that the model utilized in 2020-21.

"We've delayed the window for parents to choose because the state board has called a meeting for April 12 and we're waiting to receive guidelines from the state," Thomas told the board in his report. "If students choose virtual learning, they will be required to un-enroll from that the school district their base school and enroll in a virtual school.

"The virtual program will look much different and it will be limited."

Thomas noted that there would be three virtual schools in Knox County, one for elementary students, another for middle schoolers, and a third for students attending high school.

The three virtual schools would be limited to a combined 4,500 students with each school having a capacity of no more than

Fountain City B&P coming alive, moving to Beaver Creek Country Club

Senior Writer steelym@knoxfocus.com

One of the most active organizations in our city, the Fountain City Business and Professional Association, is moving its meeting place and hoping to get active again after a year-long struggle to meet.

Jeff Bagwell, public information officer for Rural Metro Fire and president of the association, said last week that meetings will be held at the Beaver Brook Country Club beginning Wednesday, April 14, at noon.

He said the board decided to move to the country club "so we can have hot lunches and a better venue."

"We haven't met much in the past year due to Covid but are looking with easier access and an option to advertise member businesses.

"We want the website to be a directory for all new residents and businesses moving to Fountain City," Bagwell added.

All members will receive a membership pin and a member logo to place on their windows.

"We are hoping to bring back a concert at the Duck Pond as well as the Fountain City Christmas Parade. Our speakers have already been secured for the year and each meeting will feature a business spotlight speaker," he said.

Speakers lined up for this year include Knox County Mayor Glenn > Current officers include President Bagwell, Vice President Cindy Reeves, Treasurer Holly Roach and Secretary Sharron Jennings. Regina Reed is events coordinator, Sam Clabo runs communications, and John Thaller is in charge of scholarships. Other FCBPA board members include R. Larry Smith, Mark Enix and Ashley Davenport.

Bagwell is reminding everyone that membership is open and he's hoping for a good kickoff for the organization's first meeting at Beaver Brook.

Penny Pawn location to become Take 5 Oil Change

The iconic Penny Pawn location in Fountain City may become a new Take 5 Oil Change location. The Knoxville City Council voted to change the zoning at the vacant lot, but one council member took exception to the approval of the zoning change from CG-2 to Fifth District Councilman Charles Thomas pointed to a very narrow 7-6 vote by the planning commission recommending the change and that the planning staff had suggested denying the change. Thomas said the lot, at 4821 North Broadway, was too small and had other objections.

Was the Sheriff's 287(g) Program Illegal?

I am probably worse about this than he was, because I almost always want to watch television while eating a sandwich or a meal or snack.

Of course, the term "couch potato" has been around for a long time. Almost all of us would weigh less if we made up our minds to never eat while watching television.

It is a very common thing for people to say that they really don't watch much television.

But many years ago, I read about a study in television, he seemed to which people were asked vision they watched each week.

Then the participants were given a machine to put on their televisions. The end result was that they found that people watched on average four times more than they had estimated.

We have a very serious problem in this country with screen addiction. It started with televi-

City contracts with Cities United

By Mike Steely Senior Writer steelym@knoxfocus.com

Cities United is an organization of mayors across the nation that consults with the municipalities to help prevent young Black violence.

The City of Knoxville's Office of Community Empowerment asked the city council for a $75,000 agreement for Cities United to "provide coaching and capacity building services related to violence reduction." In their mission statement Cities United says, "Community partners implement direct service programs, advocate for policy change and/or build political and public will. Community partners represent groups such as: Non-Profit Agencies, Faith Leaders, Local Philanthropic Partners, Activists, Grass Roots Organizations, Edu-

Cities United Executive Director Anthony Smith told the council he finds local partners in the effort and has worked in 130 cities. Councilwoman Seema Singh said that in dealing with youth violence, "prevention works, not law enforcement."

Councilwoman Lynne Fugate asked the Cities United representative to name some of the cities where they have worked and Canty talked about efforts in Denver.

"We figure out where the gaps are," Smith said.

In other action the council voted to apply to the Federal Transit Administration and the Tennessee Department of Transportation for $5.4 million with a city match of $1.2 to purchase electric buses. The council approved several applications for grants for the police department for radar equipment, drunk driving education, bicycle and pedestrian safety at Safety City, teen driver safety, seat belt and child seat check points, traffic safety, and an event coordinator of safety education and supplies.

Some Time Republican

Former Knoxville mayor Victor Ashe has openly called for a primary challenger to oppose County Commissioner Kyle Ward. As I recall, Ward defeated a well-heeled primary challenger in Scott Broyles. In fact, Broyles was the choice of the establishment Republicans inside the Fourth District. I'd be willing to bet Ashe supported Broyles, if the former mayor voted in the Republican primary. Ward not only beat the favorite candidate of the country club set, but pretty much kicked his butt. The first person Ashe suggested as a challenger to Ward was Marlene Davis, who is a Democrat.

Victor has a lengthy history of not supporting fellow Republicans and picking at Kyle Ward over the Board of Health isn't likely to be a winning issue with a majority of the GOP. And nobody deserves more credit for increasing the Democrat vote inside the Fourth District than Victor Ashe.

By the time Kyle Ward were wide open, nobody age plums are subject to giving Knoxville Mayor Indya Kincannon or the city council the same kind of treatment for their abject failure to do anything about enforcing the Board of Health regulations. Let us not forget the biggest coronavirus hot spot inside the City of Knoxville was the University of Tennessee. That was also the biggest hot spot for the coronavirus when Knox County was one of the hottest spots in the entire country. Nor should we forget the Board of Health never uttered a peep about the city's failure to enforce their edicts. And let's not pretend it had anything to do with jurisdiction. Knoxville is inside Knox County and there was at least one member of the Board of Health who wanted to extend the Board's power beyond Knox County. The truth is nobody held Kincannon and the city government to the same standard as the county government, Victor

Here's another inconvenient truth: the masking policy of Mayor Kincannon and the Knoxville Oddly, I don't recall Victor City Council amounted to NO masking. They can say whatever they like, but the truth is the anti-maskers and the city government had the same practical view of things in practice. Picking At Bill & Marsha...Again

Speaking of Democrats, Georgianna Vines over at the Knoxville News-Sentinel is evidently horrified Tennessee's senators are taking applications for federal offices in the Volunteer State. As Joe Biden is a Democrat, Georgianna thinks it's only fitting for the two Democrats in Congress from Tennessee, Jim Cooper of Nashville and Steve Cohen from Memphis, to supervise the selection of U.S. attorneys, U. S. Marshals and the like. Well, just to be sure, I asked our resident historian, Ray Hill, about the process and he told me the Senate must confirm all those appointments. All of those patron-

At the end of the day, both Senator Blackburn and Senator Hagerty have the right to veto any nominee by declaring that person "politically and personally objectionable," which senatorial courtesy requires be rejected by the full Senate. So, Georgianna, Bill Hagerty and Marsha Blackburn are actually doing their jobs instead of rolling over and playing dead.

Head For the Border

The Knoxville News Sentinel, in conjunction with the Compass, appears to be attempting to create its own issue out of the Knox County Sheriff's Office's participation in the 287(g) program. In essence, that is an agreement between the sheriff's department and the Immigration and Customs Enforcement program. The Sentinel, using its Compass, is supposing the opinion rendered by the Knox County Law Director's office is wrong and the county commission must ratify the agreement. The breakdown is pretty clear; the two Democrats on the county commission want some clarity and probably would not vote for the sheriff's department to participate in the 287(g) program. The great majority of Republicans on the county commission are supportive of the sheriff's department participating in the

The Sentinel quotes Stewart Harris, a highly respected legal scholar who teaches at the Duncan School of Law at Lincoln Memorial University, as saying, "Our nation and our state are founded on the bedrock principle of the rule of law. That means that everyone from state officials to common citizens are bound by the same laws. If we allow public officials to ignore state laws, then we attack the very foundations of our government." Professor Harris is exactly right. We are and should be a nation of laws, yet the Sentinel, a thoroughly Democratic and "progressive" newspaper, seems to pick and choose which laws we should follow and those which we can ignore. For instance, let's start with the most obvious example: immigration and illegal aliens. The leftist yard signs not withstanding to the contrary, the law is crystal clear: walking across the border of the United States of America is not immigrating to our country. It is absolutely illegal under the law. Being here illegally means someone can be deported back to his/her own country, which is what the 287(g) provision is all

Presently, we have district attorneys across the United States who openly say which laws they will and will not prosecute, which is not legal. There is no basis under the law to allow prosecutors to pick and choose what crimes to prosecute. That authority belongs to the state legislatures. Nor do election officials have the right to alter or otherwise change the law prior to elections without action by the legislatures.

The Sentinel is picking at what they perceive to be a scab on the Sheriff's Department's knee. Sue and test the law and, if necessary, the Commissioners can ratify the 287(g) program and Knox County's participation in that program.

I doubt very much if the Sentinel and its USA Today overlords support ICE or believe in deporting illegal aliens. No country on earth except the United States lets anybody who wishes to walk across its borders and Congress has never changed the law. It's still illegal.

Merit Board, AJ tax break and sports authority on commission agenda

By Mike Steely Senior Writer steelym@knoxfocus.com

Aside from the interview of applicants for two positions on the Sheriff's Office Merit System Council the Knox County Commission faces a fairly full agenda when it meets next Monday. Not all of the items will see discussion and most will be forwarded to their regular meeting a week later on a "consent" agenda that would be resolved with one vote.

The Knoxville FOCUS

Among those agenda items that might be discussed in the work session are several items.

The commission is being asked to approve appointments to The Sports Authority. Mayor Glenn Jacobs will submit his recommendations. The authority would oversee the issuance of bonds to cover the cost of building a minor league baseball stadium near the Old City in downtown Knoxville and is a city-county project.

The commission is also being asked by the mayor and finance department to approve a PILOT tax break agreement for the buyers of the historic Andrew Johnson Building.

The sheriff's office is asking for approval of $3,200 from the National Rifle Association Foundation to "enhance the experience" by those citizens who take part in the department's Citizen Academy. The Knox County Engineering and

Public Works Department is asking the council to approve a $1,074,055 contract with Grassy Creek LLC for improvements to Schaad Road, Oak Ridge Highway and Ball Camp Pike. Just over $1 million in HUD CARES Act funds is before the commission for use with the Interfaith Health Clinic health services, Helen Ross McNabb's behavior health counseling, and the Community Action Committee for a health assistance spe-

The health department has more than $4 million in grant requests before the commission. $1.4 million might be approved for HIV and AIDS medical services, $2.9 million from the state for public health emergency preparedness and $1.1 million for tuberculosis control and prevention.

Commissioner Carson Dailey is asking his fellow commissioners to support state legislative action to allow commission to designate sessions court as the Litter and Environmental Court and establish enforcement powers for that court. The idea is to authorize the court to sentence convicted citizens to trash among first and second grade students in reading; according to Hechinger Report, "40 percent of first grade students and 35 percent of second grade students are 'significantly at risk' of needing intensive intervention compared to 27 percent and 29 percent last year."

Recent research also confirms widespread learning losses are exaggerating racial and socioeconomic disparities, with Hispanic and Black kindergarten and first grade students falling further behind than their White peers.

Education experts have identified "high-dosage" or "high-impact" tutoring, defined as one-on-one or small group tutoring that times a week for a sustained period of time, as an effective strategy to losses and help students get back on track.

Students participating in the 2020 TTC were assessed both at the beginning and end of the program. After completing between 7 and 8 weeks of tutoring, the average national percentile rank increased across all grades and subjects with the largest gains in grades K-2 and in math.

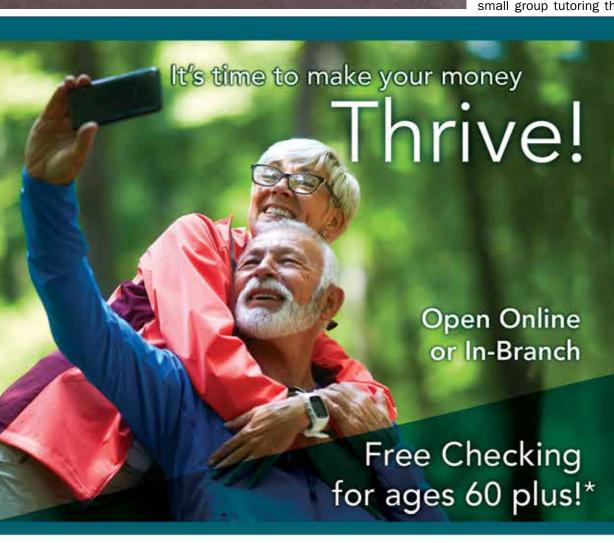

TTC aims to recruit at least 1,000 qualified college students or recent graduates to tutor rising 1st - 4th grade students. JOSEPH MABRY Joseph Alexander Mabry II was born in 1826 and became a very successful businessman in Knoxville. He earned his wealth through land and railroad speculation prior to the Civil War and was known for his herd of race horses. Mabry sided with the South in the Civil War and was given the rank of general for supplying Confederate troops here with goods. Mabry and his family donated land for what became Market Square and was president of the Kentucky and Knoxville Railroad. After the war he returned to Knoxville and made up with the pro-Union businessmen. In 1882 Mabry and his son were shot to death downtown in a gun battle with a Knoxville banker. The incident was recalled by Mark Twain in his book "Life on the Mississippi." The historic Mabry-Hazen House still

The Death of Estes Kefauver

Pages from the Past

By Ray Hill rayhill865@gmail.com

Lyndon Johnson once called Estes Kefauver, "The greatest campaigner of them all." Kefauver was no silver-tongued orator; in fact, he was oftentimes tongue-tied and frequently mangled names and phrases. Yet Estes Kefauver likely had no peer as a retail politician in meeting folks oneon-one. Estes Kefauver also generated strong feelings in the people he represented. I well recall my Baptist Democrat grandmother adored Kefauver while her husband, my grandfather, a Methodist and a Republican, loathed the senator.

Kefauver had served as

for the State of Tennessee briefly in the administration of Governor Prentice Cooper when he hurried home to run for Congress in a special election caused by the sudden death of Congressman Sam D. McReynolds in 1939. Estes Kefauver won the Democratic primary over a state senator and beat the GOP candidate in the general election. Kefauver was ambitious and had his eye on a seat in the United States Senate. Kefauver cast a longing eye in the direction of Senator Kenneth D. McKellar, Tennessee's Iongest serving United States Senator. In 1946 the seventy-seven year-old McKellar had been ill and had served Tennessee for thirtysix years in the House and Senate. K. D. McKellar was a renowned political feudist and TVA Director David consulted him about building a dam in Tennessee. As he always did, McKellar pursued his quarry relentlessly. Lilienthal would have made a formidable heroine inasmuch as he played the role of a virtuous and helpless victim to perfection. Congressman Kefauver announced he was thinking of running against McKellar in 1946. Much to his disappointment, Estes Kefauver quickly changed his mind, determining the old senator was too deeply entrenched in Tennessee to be beaten. Kefauver did support Edward "Ned" Car-to campaign. Kefauver ran for the Senate in 1948 against Senator Stewart and won the Democratic primary with the unintentional aid of E. H. Crump, leader of the Shelby County political machine. Crump was vehemently opposed to Kefauver's candidacy, but he had informed Senator Stewart he would not have the Shelby County political machine's support in 1948. Instead, the Mem-

never even met. Crump had been confident once told he did not have the support of Shelby County, Senator Stewart would not run again. Tom Stewart issued a fiery statement denouncing the Memphis Boss and insisted upon running anyway. It soon became clear Estes Kefauver might squeak through the primary with a plurality, which is exactly what happened.

Kefauver had steered clear of the candidacy of President Harry Truman in Tennessee, who was perceived to be a sure loser in the general election. Nor did Truman have the support of E. H. Crump, who announced he was backing "Dixiecrat" candidate Strom Thurmond. Senator McKellar stoutly endorsed Truman. Kefauver faced the first serious challenge by a Republican in a general election since McKellar had defeated former governor Ben W. Hooper in 1916. Former congressman Carroll Reece from upper East Tennessee ran as the GOP candidate for the U. S. Senate. Kefauver won easily. Once inside the United States Senate, Estes Kefauver did not receive a warm welcome, unlike another newly elected senator, Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas. Kefauver's reception by his senior colleague, Senator McKellar, was arctic. It was not long before the two Tennessean were fighting over appointments in the Volunteer State. Kefauver had a Republican for federal office in West Tennessee. McKellar gleefully pointed out Kefauver's endorsement to the White House. Estes Kefauver began complaining every patronage dispute save one had been decided in McKellar's favor. That one instance involved the U. S. Marshal for the Middle Tennessee district. Reed Sharp had made the mistake of not supporting Harry Truman and the President refused to reappoint him. The Kefauver - McKellar relationship was never warm while they served together in the Senate; in fact, during one exchange between them on the floor, Senator William "Wild Bill" Langer of North Dakota jumped up and playfully asked which of them represented the Hatfields and which represented the

was part of the "inner club" that ran the United States Senate. Kefauver's crime investigation, the first such investigation to capture the popular imagination of the public as it was broadcast on the relatively new medium of television, had helped to bring about the defeat of Senate Majority Leader Scott Lucas of Illinois. Kefauver and his committee had revealed some quite embarrassing facts about the Democratic nominee for Sheriff of Cook County (Chicago), causing the news media to label him "the world's richest cop." Daniel "Tubbo" Gilbert cheerfully admitted he had been remarkably lucky in gambling, which explained his earnings. Estes Kefauver was also more liberal than many of his contemporaries, especially in Tennessee. Kefauver had fierce opposition in the form of Congressman Pat Sutton, who challenged the senator in the 1954 Democratic primary. Sutton continuously battered Kefauver's record and attracted attention for his use of a helicopter, then a novelty, during the campaign. Sutton was wellfinanced, but Kefauver's victory was overwhelming. Senator Kefauver was renominated with better than 68% of the vote. Kefauver carried everything else. Kefauver's margins in Tennessee's four big urban counties were astonishing; the senator won Knox County with better than 75% of the vote; Kefauver won Davidson County with 72% and almost 73% in his home county of Hamilton. Even in the ailing Boss Crump's domain (Crump would die in little more than a month following the primary election), Senator Kefauver won quite nearly

Kefauver competed with a young senator from Massachusetts named John F. Kennedy. It was a sign of Kefauver's personal popularity that he won the nomi-

Estes Kefauver campaigned tirelessly throughout the general election, but Dwight Eisenhower proved to be a popular incumbent. The Stevenson - Kefauver ticket lost and the senator was embarrassed to see Eisenhower carry Tennessee once again. Perhaps the most vitriolic campaign Estes Kefauver ever faced was his reelection effort in 1960. Kefauver faced a backlash from white supremacists as well as those citizens who just found the senator too liberal for their own tastes. Andrew "Tip" Taylor was well known, especially in his native West Tennessee, and had quite nearly upset Buford Ellington for the gubernatorial nomination two years earlier. Taylor ran yet another fierce campaign against Senator Kefauver. Once again, Kefauver won an astonishing victory, polling almost 65% of the vote. Senator Kefauver won almost 80% of the vote in Knox County.

That same year, Richard Nixon carried Tennessee over John F. Kennedy by a greater margin than that won by Dwight Eisenhower Kefauver was as busy as ever. Chairman of the Senate's Anti-Trust & Monopoly subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, the senator announced the first week of August there would be an investigation of a corporation owned by boxer Sonny Liston. Senator Kefauver told reporters he would also press for passage of his bill giving the U.S. Justice Department regulatory powers over "interstate professional boxing." Senator Kefauver was also deeply involved in a legislative spat with drug manufacturers (the legal kind), which involved yet another investigation as to whether interests in the U.S. were attempting to put McKesson & Robbins, then the biggest drug wholesaler in the world, out of business. Local press reports at the time stated McKesson & Robbins sold prescription drugs at "rock-bottom prices in Colombia in cooperation with the Colombian government."

Anti-inflammatory

Muscle growth and energy

Columnist Norman Bradley reminded his readers in August it had been Senator Estes Kefauver who had initially insisted a "nationwide crime syndicate does exist" in the United States. At the time, the FBI didn't acknowledge there was such a thing as the Mafia.

Ellis Binkley, the political columnist for the Kingsport Times related a story told to him by Senator Albert Gore, who recalled a man who telephoned him at home at 2 a.m. The man, whom Gore knew only slightly, was from Memphis and asked the senator to take care of the "white folks" in Tennessee. Gore replied he tried to take care of all his constituents, causing his caller to say, "I don't want to eat with 'em, sleep with 'em, go to school with 'em, or go to church with 'em." Sena- as to any other man living tor Gore drily wondered if ... I've been after him for the fellow wanted to go to several years to slow down Heaven with them. That but he just kept going like a retort drew a long pause and finally the caller sighed and said, "No, I guess I will go to hell with you and Kefauver." Gore said he recalled the telephone call in the Senate cloakroom but noted his senior colleague was not pleased. "I don't think Estes appreciated it one bit," Gore told a group at the Democratic Women's picnic.

On August 10 the Nashville Banner ran a bold headline announcing the death of Estes Kefauver. The late senator's administrative assistant, Charles Caldwell, announced Kefauver had died at 1:40 a.m. from a "rupture in the main blood vessel of the heart." Senator Kefauver had left the Senate floor complaining of chest pains, yet the Tennessean thought he had a bad case of indigestion. Eventually he went to be checked out at the Bethesda Naval Hospital where doctors determined he had suffered a mild heart attack and needed surgery. Years of heavy smoking and drinking had taken their toll on the senator. Physicians were firm in stating the senator would require complete rest for at least three weeks. During the night, Kefauver suffered a "dissecting aneurism of the wall of the ascending aorta." That required immediate surgery to repair the inner wall of the senator's

Kefauver put off the surgery until his wife Nancy could be present. Mrs. Kefauver was out of town and flying back hurriedly. As her plane landed in Washington, D.C., Estes Kefauver's aorta burst and he died. Caldwell was at Kefauver's bedside when the senator died. Estes Kefauver slipped away "quickly and peacefully."

Tributes began pouring in from Kefauver's friends and colleagues. Former governor Gordon Browning, who had been Kefauver's running mate in the 1948 campaign said, "I am extremely shocked and deeply grieved ... his life was a crusade for better government and a high standard of living for all Americans." George R. Dempster, former mayor of Knoxville, when queried by a reporter following Senator Kefauver's passing, replied, "I have been here 76 years and I consider him to be the greatest senator Tennessee ever had. The state owes him as much on TVA house afire." The funeral of Estes Kefauver remains one of the largest public funerals in the history of Tennessee. My grandmother was a native of Madisonville, Tennessee and she went to say goodbye to her friend Estes. For many Tennesseans of a certain age, they retain distinct memories of the man who was the greatest campaigner of them all.

Big inning nets victory for Hardin Valley in rivalry game

By Ken Lay

A pair of big innings led to a comeback victory for the Hardin Valley Academy baseball team in a District 4-AAA game against a big rival Tuesday night,

The Hawks culminated the unlikely win with an eight-run seventh with a walk-off single by Brycen Denton that gave HVA a 13-12 victory over Turkey Creek Area rival and previously undefeated Farragut.

Comebacks have always been a part of baseball but the Hawks (12-2 overall, 6-1 in the district) fell behind the state's topranked team 9-0.

1951 Cotton Bowl game against Texas is No. 1, Johnny Butler's run against Alabama in 1939 is 1a, and Jay Graham's touchdown runs against Alabama in 1995 and 1996 have to 1b and 1c. Steve World's 82-yard carry against Vanderbilt in 1969 that came ever-so-close to being a touchdown is equally compelling. All of them have a logical basis for being so honored.

Sports Illustrated has called Lauricella's run "arguably the best in Cotton Bowl history." The tape of that run taken from the game film is black and white and grainy, obviously showing the effects of the passage of time, but it's a significant part of Tennessee football history. It came in a game with Ten-

This run, showing the precision blocking at the line of scrimmage and downfield, set up Tennessee's first score. If ever a picture summarized the offensive philosophy behind the single-wing, this is the one.

Here's the way BC radio's Bill Stern described Lauricella's run. It's Tennessee's ball, first and-10, at the Vol 20. The game was score-

Lauricella is the tailback. He's going outside his own right end. He's up to the 25, the 30, into the clear at the 35, the 40, the 45, the 50, down to the 45. "He's hemmed in at the

"He's still running. He's down to the 20, reverses his field once more to the 15, the 10, and he's finally knocked down at the 5-yard line by Harley Sewell."

But that wasn't all. Stern nessee being ranked No. quickly brought the run insight that made him one of radio's greatest play-byplay men ever. "Hank Lauricella went 85

[actually 75] yards for Tennessee, and time is out. Hank Lauricella went 85 yards. He started on his own five [actually the 20], zigzagged all the way up the field. He was almost out of bounds on two occasion. It looked like they had him pinned against the sidelines. Each time, he did "Single-wing right. Hank a tightrope act. Stayed in bounds and, at the 30, it looked like the whole Texas team had a shot at him. He got down to the five, and Harley Sewell got him."

More perspective.

"It's first-and-five and, believe me, wait 'til you see that run on the newsreels. That was a thriller. He did a tightrope act on the sideline that would make any tightrope walker jealous and, when he got to the center of the field, he broke into the clear about the 50, started zigzagging on the 40. Since he was zigzagging and they were running straight, they could overtake him.

"They hit him from behind on about the 40, and somehow he managed to elude the grasp of four Texans. He completely reversed his field, spun on a dime, handed them eight cents in change, cut toward the center of the field, and again burst into the clear at the 25. He eluded three more men and got down to the five and Harold [Herky] Payne has taken his place."

That run, followed by a fourth-down touchdown pass from Payne to end John Gruble, gave the Vols a 7-0 lead. Even with the TD pass, Payne, who died this past March, didn't play much the rest of the day. Bob Davis took great delight in sharing Herky's reaction. "Threw for one, through for the day," Davis recalled Herky saying. The game is a classic in the history of Tennessee football, with a memorable run, and a stirring fourth quarter comeback. The Vols trailed at the half, but rallied in the fourth quarter behind two Andy Kozar touchdown runs and an interception and fumble recovery by Maryville's Jimmy (Cowboy) Hill. Lauricella and Kozar have each been inducted into the Cotton Bowl Hall of Fame.

Kozar and Davis have also told the story about the University of Texas band marching past the Vol dressing room before the game, playing the "Eyes of Texas." Ever the master psychologist, Neyland told the Vols that, after the game, the song of choice would be the "Tennessee Waltz."

"Outweighed 25 pounds per man but never outgamed," wrote Haywood Harris and Gus Manning ("Six Seasons Remembered: The National Championship Years of Tennessee Football"). The Vols ended up winning on a rainy day in "Big D."

Lack of Tennessee Football Buzz

Tennessee's football team is a couple of weeks into spring practice.

Did you know this? You probably did. Maybe you didn't. I don't know your level of fandom.

But the odds are you aren't transfixed on quotes from Vols assistant coaches how wide receiver Dee Beckwith has looked with the offense or if the secondary has shown signs that they can improve.

Tennessee's spring practice exists. That's about all you can say about it.

At least that appears to be the overall feeling among Vols fans these days.

There are certainly reasons for this apparent nessee is going to put on apathy (and we will discuss any promotional materials. the danger of apathy later in the article). The Vols are coming off a 3-7 season, one of the worst in program history. The previous head coach, Jeremy Pruitt, was booted after three years due to alleged recruiting violations. The athletics director, Phillip Fulmer, was forced into retirement as well. The transfer portal was vicious to Tennessee, with their top offensive player (running back Eric Gray), their top returning offensive lineman (Wanya Morris), and their top recruit from the Class of 2020 (safety Key Lawrence) all leaving UT. All three of them will play at Oklahoma next season. Tennessee's top overall player the past two seasons, linebacker Henry To'o To'o, also entered the transfer portal and is expected to play elsewhere this Fall.

Recently, one player was suspended from the team due to accusations of animal abuse. Four other players, including freshman quarterback Kaidon Salter, were arrested on drug charges in March and have yet to practice with the

You can also include COVID fatigue I guess, but make decisions on what to Neyland Stadium. the real issue is the mess that Tennessee football is these days. UT made a solid hire in new athletics director Danny White, and time will tell if Josh Heupel succeeds as head coach.

But in the meantime, Tennessee's athletics department is in a world of financial hurt. They lost tens of millions of dollars in revenue during the pandemic and appear to be struggling in terms of season ticket

And here is where the danger of apathy sets in. Fans that aren't interested in a team tend to be the ones that aren't buying popcorn, t-shirts, and sweatshirts. They are also the ones that decide to skip out on their annual donations and ticket purchases. The thing that college sports can offer much more than professional sports can is nostalgia. So many Tennessee fans grew up supporting the team. They have memories of watching the games in person or listening to John Ward on the Vol Network. Maybe they attended UT or had family members who earned a degree from the state's flagship university.

1998 is getting further and further in the rearview.

So, it is up to White, Heupel, the Vols and the entire Tennessee athletics department to give UT fans a reason to buy in for the 2021 team. As of the writing of this article, there was talk of holding an open practice at Neyland Stadium. That would be a nice touch. It's been a while since that

Simon and Garfunkel When an idea for an essay presents itself, I've learned to make a note because the thought may disappear, and every week a column is due. I used to make notes on scraps of paper which would get lost in the pockets of my lab coat or even on my crowded desk. I took comfort hearing that a cluttered desk is evidence of a fertile imagination. It certainly seemed true for the science fiction writer Ray Bradbury. These days, instead of scraps of paper I use the Notes appli-

Throughout my work-People hearing without ing years a quiet Saturday morning was a favorite time for me, unless I was oncall for the weekend and I had hospital rounds on my patients and those of my partners.

> Life is different now. Since I am retired, I often turn my phone off at night, something I haven't done in more than four decades. My wife always worried about calls in the middle of the night because I would mostly listen. She worried about the silence and whether I had fallen asleep. You don't do well as a doctor if you can't listen well and make decisions, even if comments are terse Sunday. Jesus had been at 2 a.m.

hawking investment plans which said, "Retirement is when you pay yourself for doing what you want to do." Becky and I were frugal all our lives and we've been blessed. Each generation of parents wants their kids to have a good life, if not a better life than they did. That dream is now in jeop-

My home is now my office and is silent this morning as I sit to write this essay actually I "hunt and peck" on a computer because I never learned my keyboard. But after three books and over 700 essays I peck pretty fast. "Good enough for government work," as they say.

For decades a rock with the inscription carpe diem (seize the day) sat on my desk at work. I still have the rock which continues to challenge me to seize each day and sing the Psalmist's song of life (118:24).

Easter is now past, but a book by John Ortberg recently caused me to consider the silence of Saturday before the first Easter tried, executed and his Most days are now like body entombed on Good Friday.

> It was tough for Jesus' followers after the crucifixion. The Gospel finds them gestapo on Saturday's Sabbath. I was recently challenged when a friend asked, "Where was Jesus' spirit on that silent Saturday?'

As a science-based guy there are things I don't know and may never be able to directly measure or observe. I've never been to Hong Kong or seen an electron, but I know they exist. Similarly, I can't measure the essence of a person, something I call the nonanatomical soul, but I maintain that it exists. Actually, in the Middle Ages, pseudo scientists tried to measure the soul by weighing criminals before execution and then immediately after death with the soul departed. That did not work out very well for obvious rea-

But returning to the original question, where was Jesus' essence on that silent Saturday? Historical records show that his body was in the tomb. However, an empiricist would say that no one saw Jesus' body on Saturday. However, with the stone over the entrance, reason dictates his body was in the tomb. Interestingly, while on the cross, Jesus promised one criminal, "Today you will be with me in paradise." That was

I remember a commercial hiding from the Temple on Good Friday. After three centuries of reflection, Church experts adopted the Nicene and Apostles' Creeds which state Jesus was dead, he descended into Hell and on the third day arose. So, to answer my friend's question, perhaps Jesus' body and essence were in both places on Saturday. It's a quantum conundrum.

I'm a fan of Simon and Garfunkel's music. The 60s duo artfully blended singable melodies, syncopated rhythms and thoughtprovoking poetry, something far different than the shock jocks of gangsta rap and pop music today. The disgusting Cardi B and Megan Thee Stallion's raunchy lesbian exhibition at the Grammy Awards is emblematic of a devolved culture. I am no prude, but silence is not golden in the face of such depravity.

Nor is silence an option in the war to save America from leftists, radicals and corporate "woke" and atoning sycophants. As a law-abiding citizen and a member of the silent majority, I don't plan to march, loot or burn in protest of the corporate cowards who hope to curry the favor of leftists by opposing the Georgia election reform laws. Rand Paul said the "election reforms in Georgia make it easier to vote but harder to cheat." In my investigation of the legislation, I agree. However, Major League Baseball, one day after signing a lucrative deal with a television subsidiary of the Chinese Communist government, moved the All-Star game from Atlanta to Denver, Colorado, which has tougher election laws than Georgia.

I emailed MLB corporate that I will not buy their merchandise, tickets or watch their games and advertisements. I will add MLB to my boycott of the NBA (in bed with China) and the NFL. Similarly, I wrote to Uber, Delta Airlines and United Airlines that I am boycotting them for their "woke" opposition to the needed Georgia election reforms. Lastly, I have been a life time user of Coca-Cola products, but no more. I also wrote to their corporate office that I am boycotting them as well.

Shunning something or someone is to avoid them deliberately and habitually. Silence is actionable with a boycott. These corporate fools are boycotting half of their customers. Let's turn the table. The left started class warfare. Let's finish it.

came out in the 80's-90's, ones like "Lethal Weapon" and "Die Hard." Just last night, I surfed stations and found "Demolition Man." The movie came out in 1993 and it was set in the future where Big Brother was everywhere. Who would have ever guessed that such an old movie could speak to us in the present?

I'm not "woke," nor do I care to be. Change for change's sake, shaming for not thinking like the crowd, and tongue lashing for using incorrect words irritate me. Most of all, the failure to use any common sense drives me into apoplectic in frozen states while their brains are taught new ways to act are arch enemies who curse, take tickets, and wad them up. The vocabulary of this new world excludes any words that might hurt another person's feelings. Their conversations lack life and nonviolent one. Even the sists of red meat, processed police are nonviolent in their arrests. They explain to suspects why they are being arrested, and then violators submit and go with the officers. What a wonderful world that might be, but only if people give up crimes altogether, something that is not going to happen. Freedom of choice automatically

Boots, Baton, and The Pageant! (Part 9 in Dwight Kessel series)

ralphine3@yahoo.com

"Why did you twirl fire?" my mother asked looking at the picture.

"My teacher's idea," I replied. My unlikely bond with the baton had started nearly a year earlier when my brother decided the trumpet was not a good fit for him; he claimed my clarinet. The band director needed an oboe player for concert band, so my parents bought one for me. But the oboe could not be played in marching band since it required a double reed mouthpiece---a delicate and expensive mouthpiece! Our family's one-income salary was already paying for piano and

I am not sure exactly how the idea came about for me to take baton lessons and try out for the majorette corps, but we found a great teacher in former University of Tennessee Head Majorette and former Miss Majorette of America Judy Barton Cox. At the old Fountain City Lions Club building on Essary Road, I learned the routine she choreographed to Nancy Sinatra's "These Boots Are Made for Walking." When tryouts took place in the spring, I became a Fall came and brought with it the Knoxville Jr. Miss Pageant sponsored by The Kiwanis Club of Northside Knoxville. It was during the pageant activities that I first met Dwight Kessel, a Kiwanis Club member. Onstage at the Knoxville Civic Auditorium, Sinatra's voice rang out over the speakers while I performed the only solo routine I knew. But I knew it well!

I wore my only baton twirling outfit, our navy band uniform with a simple V-shaped accent of white sequins to match the military style band uniforms chosen by our Band Director, the late S. L. Valentine. My waist-length locks were tightly curled to stay clear of the fire baton.

It was a fun night for this then 16-yearold student. I later learned my grandfather passed up the weekly wrestling program on television to come to the pageant. While I did not win the 1972 Knoxville Jr. Miss Title, I was the recipient of a savings bond awarded to the Scholastic Achievement Winner from East Tennessee's late Congressman John J. Duncan, Sr.

Afterwards, The Kiwanis Club Pageant Officials gave me the treasured photo shown here. The pageant was over and pictures packed away. Years later, I would meet Kessel again.
