Con Hunley returning to stage for first post-pandemic concert

Country music artist Con Hunley looks forward to performing at the Union County Opry on Saturday, April 1st.

By Focus Staff

"Well, we never thought it would be this long, but we are thankful and excited to be getting back to making music!"

Con Hunley, one of East Tennessee's brightest stars, is eager to perform his first full show with his band since the pandemic hit three years ago.

"We had just finished doing a great show at Walters State toward the end of February in 2020 and had several shows in the works for that year, including a Con Hunley and Friends Cruise. But two weeks after that last show the world stopped.

"We thought it would just be a couple of weeks or a month at the most, but as we all know that's not how it happened."

Hunley's career has endured, spanning decades with 25 songs on the Billboard Country Hot 100 and 11 of those in the Top Twenty. Hunley has performed on county music's biggest stages, toured and shared the stage with some of country music's biggest names, and he is still going strong! Hunley told The Focus that it was quite an adjustment when things shut down. He filled his time playing a lot of golf, which he didn't mind at all. When venues started opening back up in 2021 and into 2022, Con Hunley started slowly getting back out there, taking part in several special events in and around Nashville with his country music industry friends, including Country's Family Reunion.

Last year when Larry Gatlin and the Gatlin Brothers came to the Bijou, Hunley was in attendance and Larry got him

By a 2-9 vote the Knox County Commission defeated a resolution by Commissioner Dasha Lundy to subpoena Sheriff Tom Spangler to testify during a commission meeting. Lundy and Commission Chair Courtney Durrett voted to call the sheriff to address the commission.

Lundy has been proposing subpoenaing the testimony of Sheriff Tom Spangler and the deputies who encountered the 15-year-old sister of the slain Anthony Thompson Jr. for more than three

Real Time Information Center approved by City Council

By Mike Steely
Senior Writer
steelym@knoxfocus.com

Adding $1.02 million to the new Public Safety Center project to house a Real Time Information Center passed in a 7-2 vote at the Knoxville City Council meeting Tuesday evening. That brings the current estimated total of remodeling the former St. Mary's Hospital just off North Broadway to $53.43 million.

The addition and creation of the Real Time Center, which would be used to view and collect images from cameras around Knoxville, would be similar to observation cameras already in place in New Orleans, Chattanooga and elsewhere. The police department estimates the facility would have three certified professionals, two operators and five other employees.

Chief Paul Noel estimated the cost of cameras, to be placed at selected sites with high crime rates, to be about $2,000 each but Councilwoman Lauren Rider said quality cameras could cost more than $15,000 each. Councilwoman Gwen McKenzie said that if the city is putting money into the safety of the community, high-resolution cameras should be purchased.

The purchase of cameras is not part of the $1.02 million for the Real Time Center physical facility. Noel said, that with permission, the observation cameras around town at businesses, KCDC, or traffic cameras could be used. He said the new center at the Public Safety Center could be operating by this fall.

Noel told the council the cameras could be used in real-time observation on a 911 call or after a report to help identify a suspect.

Council members Seema Singh and Amelia Parker voiced concerns about the use or potential

Eight unclaimed veterans honored Wednesday

By Mike Steely

It rained all day Wednesday as hundreds of people braved the dampness to attend a very special ceremony at the East Tennessee Veterans Cemetery.

One woman said the rain was fitting because the sky was crying for those unclaimed veterans. There were so many people who turned out that the chapel was full and people stood outside to watch as several different Dignity Chapel hearses delivered the remains of the Army, National Guard and Navy veterans.

Services were performed by Knox County Mayor Glenn Jacobs and Chaplain Pat Polis of the Vietnam Veterans of America. Military honors included the U.S. Navy, U.S. Army, East Tennessee Veterans Honor Guard, Volunteer State Honor Guard, Pigeon Forge Honor Guard and the Knox County Sheriff's Office.

To date, 97 unclaimed veterans and spouses in the Knoxville area have been interred by that funeral home.

Honored during the ceremony were Sgt. First Class Jerry Alan Palmer; Spec. 5 David Brent Bledsoe; Spec 4 Robert Daniel Edwards; Private 1st Class Terrell Wayne Biggerstaff; Aviation Boatswain Mate Charles Robert McMeans; Private Joseph McGoldrick; Private Fredrick Joseph Chase; and Private Paul Deen Alexander.

Tucker Carlson A Courageous Journalist

From a distance

By John J. Duncan Jr.
duncanj@knoxfocus.com

Those in the media who are not supporting Tucker Carlson's release of the January 6th video tapes from inside the U.S. Capitol should be ashamed.

Their silence has been deafening. In the future, their statements in favor of freedom of the press and against government secrecy will ring very hollow.

It is obvious why Democrats wanted to keep these tapes secret. They show that almost all the protesters who entered the Capitol that day did so in a peaceful, non-violent way.

In fact, many entered or walked through doors held open for them by Capitol Police.

The tapes show beyond a shadow of a doubt that the narrative by the Democrats and their lapdogs in the media was false or, at the very least, greatly exaggerated.

They show that the description of the events of that day as a "violent insurrection" is just ridiculous.

And most ridiculous of all was the statement by the Vice-President, Kamala Harris, trying to make Jan. 6th as bad as what happened on Dec. 7th and/or 9/11. Everyone who lost loved ones or family members at Pearl Harbor or at the World Trade Center or the Pentagon on those days should have been offended.

The only person who lost her life on Jan. 6th was Ashli Babbitt, a young military veteran who was shot in the back by a trigger-happy

Capitol policeman who was not threatened by her in any way.

I said in my first column after Jan. 6th that some of the people who broke into the Capitol or into private offices or damaged property should be prosecuted, but not people who simply walked peacefully through public parts of the Capitol with Capitol Police acting almost as tour guides.

I understand the political motives of Democrats who want to make Trump supporters look as bad and even as dangerous as possible.

Thus, it is also easy to understand their great embarrassment at the release of these tapes which they tried so hard to keep secret.

However, it is almost impossible to understand why anyone who claims to be a true journalist would be willing to aid the Democrats in this cover-up.

Any reporter or journalist who defends this government secrecy does not deserve the title and has become an arm of the Democratic National Committee.

I do realize that there is a very great amount of professional jealousy in the media just as there is in most professions, and many are very jealous of Tucker Carlson, who has the number one show on cable television today.

If the shoe was on the other foot and a liberal reporter had been able to uncover and publicize secret tapes held by a conservative administration, the reporter would probably be awarded a Pulitzer Prize.

I also understand why Mitch McConnell, Mitt Romney, and a very few other Republicans have criticized Tucker Carlson for this release.

Almost all Republicans realize that most in the national media are in bed with the Democrats. But most Republicans at the national level play up to the media in hopes of neutralizing them or maybe even occasionally getting a little praise.

Some like McConnell, Romney, and a few others would rather be praised by the Washington Post and New York Times and the liberal media than they would by their own constituents.

McConnell has spent much more time in Washington, D.C., since being elected than he has in Kentucky, and Romney grew up in Michigan, was governor of Massachusetts, has a vacation home in New Hampshire, and has spent most of his life in places other than the state of Utah he supposedly represents.

As a former Criminal Court Judge, I know that all over this country people charged with murder, rape, and other serious felonies have been allowed to make bond. Also, their lawyers are supposed to be given access to any evidence, such as video tapes, that might be favorable to the defendant.

The Jan. 6th tapes show that the nut who has falsely been portrayed as the leader of the protesters walked peacefully around the Capitol with at least nine different policemen with or near him at all times, and he even said a prayer on the Senate floor giving thanks for officers.

To give him a four-year sentence, continuing to hold other defendants even now without bail, withholding evidence from them and their lawyers, and prosecuting one man for over a year who simply walked into the Capitol for less than one minute without hurting any person or property - all add up to a travesty of justice.

Isn't it time to fire incompetent bank regulators?

The failure of Silicon Valley Bank sparked a mini-panic in financial markets. The word "contagion" was tossed around as if the banking system were replete with other banks in similar straits as SVB. There was even an old-fashioned bank run at SVB and some other banks resulting in the failure of Barney Frank's Signature Bank. You may recall that Frank was a cosponsor of the Dodd-Frank Act which was supposed to lessen bank failure.

By Dr. Harold A. Black

I presume the run was from depositors who held more than the federally insured $250,000 since 94% of SVB's deposits were over the insured amount. Those depositors would only be able to access $250,000 and would receive a voucher for the rest. Of course, the Biden administration through the FDIC did exactly the wrong thing by insuring all deposits regardless of denomination. This will inspire continued recklessness by some bankers to conduct unsafe and unsound banking practices. Moreover, the bailout was for depositors who likely did not need to be rescued. The SVB episode is a prime example of incompetence at all levels. The banking executives, the California state banking regulator and the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco were all complicit and all should be fired.

To recount, SVB was heavily involved in the tech industry, startups and venture capital. It expanded its loan portfolio rapidly taking advantage of the Fed's low-interest rate policy that started in 2009. That SVB grew so rapidly should have been a warning sign to its regulators. Too rapid growth is a fundamental warning sign and was apparently ignored by the regulators. Another warning sign that the bank was in trouble was its borrowing of $15 billion from the Federal Home Loan Bank system. SVB's management was incompetent and obviously did not learn its lesson from the S and L failures of the 1980s.

The S&Ls failed because they had short-term liabilities (deposits) and long-term assets (mortgages). When interest rates rose, the cost of their liabilities rose while the return on their assets stayed the same, eventually resulting in insolvency. The same thing happened with SVB. They took their deposits and either loaned them out to tech firms and startups or bought long-term bonds. They then were doubly exposed by the downturn in the tech industry and the Fed's raising of interest rates. The downturn in tech brought about defaults on SVB's loans and the rise in interest rates meant that SVB's bond portfolio lost value. As a result, SVB started borrowing liquidity from the Federal Home Loan Bank system. Surely, the regulators had to have been aware of the borrowing and should have moved to examine the bank. Since SVB was a state-chartered bank, the primary responsibility for examining the bank for safety and soundness lies with California's Department of Financial Protection and Innovation. The state regulator did not act until it took possession of SVB citing inadequate liquidity and insolvency and turned the bank over to the FDIC to dispose of its assets and pay out insured depositors. That California did not pursue corrective actions sooner is an indictment of that department and its heads should be fired. But of course, they won't. It is also an indictment of the Federal regulators, namely the FDIC and the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco.

To my knowledge, no Federal Reserve president has ever been fired. It is time to change that and for the Fed to fire the president of the San Francisco Fed, Mary Daly. The regional Fed banks have the responsibility for supervising and examining the Fed member banks in their districts and the San Francisco Fed failed to heed the warning signs from SVB and shares the responsibility of this debacle. Mary Daly has long been recognized as one of the least able of all Fed bank presidents. She does not have a background in bank regulation and supervision and has not made these an important part of her tenure at the head of the reserve bank. In fact, she was once a "labor inequity researcher" - whatever that is - at the San Francisco Fed and said that the Marxist economist Gene Wagner "has mentored me my whole life."

It is time for the Fed to reexamine the role of the regional banks and emphasize safety and soundness. It is also time for the Fed to insist that its regional presidents have training and background in these areas. The stability of the banking system is too important to be left in the hands of amateurs and the incompetent. Both the heads of the California regulator and the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco bear responsibility and both should be fired.

residents speaking in favor of the change. Six local residents spoke against the change, which could add as many as 144 duplex units.

The need for additional housing trumped the concerns of the citizens there. Councilwoman Janet Testerman said the developer is a good steward of projects and Councilman Tommy Smith said that the "housing needs are more urgent" in the city.

Vice Mayor Andrew Roberto, who chaired the meeting, spoke for Indya Kincannon and the council at the beginning of the meeting to urge city residents to contact their state representative to oppose changes in voting procedures. He said that SB526 before the state senate will "disenfranchise voters" by limiting city council races to only district voters. He also noted that Knoxville is a "Home Rule" city that allows citizens to decide how local elections are held.

Pond Gap's President David Williams got a victory in adding the name "Home Run Alley" to a portion of Sutherland Avenue in his neighborhood.

An emergency ordinance to place a 90-day building moratorium on all of the South Waterfront failed when Amelia Parker's motion did not get a second.

The lease agreement with Tennessee Valley Agricultural and Industrial Fair was extended for one year as the city works out a future five-year lease.

Publisher's Positions

By Steve Hunley, Publisher
publisher@knoxfocus.com

Districts Should Be Districts, At-Large Should Be At-Large

It is an interesting thing to see the Left in Knox County defend the last relic of segregation in our community. I am referring to the system of voting inside the City of Knoxville for the supposed "districts." The Knoxville City Council is comprised of nine seats: three elected at-large, meaning citywide, and six from districts. The present law requires candidates to run in the primary, which is restricted to the confines of a district. The general election is then run citywide. In an article last week, the Knoxville News Sentinel sought an opinion from professor Eitan Hersh from Tufts University about Knoxville district to citywide voting. "Racial discrimination issues aside, I can imagine for any city where policy differences differ by district, this system simply grants the overall city majority an outsized power relative to a district system," Hersh replied. Neither Hersh nor another professor asked for a quote had ever heard of a city holding elections as does Knoxville.

Although the Sentinel clearly has a different opinion, to its credit the daily newspaper did quote former elections administrator Cliff Rodgers as saying, "What business do I have in deciding who represents another district? What's the purpose of having an at-large representative then? It's puzzling. You can't help but question how we got to this place and how it was set up."

The Sentinel failed to point out Seema Singh has only once carried the district she supposedly represents, but did mention she is an Indian American. The theme of the News Sentinel's article within an article seemed to be race and "diversity." I've said it before and I am saying it again; take out articles about race and food and the daily newspaper would be as blank as a ream of copy paper.

What did surprise me was the Sentinel's acknowledgment of the fact that the existing method of electing our city councilmen is one of the last relics of segregation as --- and these are the words from the News Sentinel --- it "allows a 'white veto' of Black candidates. . ." The daily newspaper says it has rarely worked out that way. The system seems designed, at least originally, to prevent the election of a Black candidate by forcing that candidate to run citywide rather than in what was then a majority Black district. While the district is still predominantly a minority district, it is no longer a Black majority district. Much as the woke writers at the News Sentinel might wish otherwise, there is no guarantee a Black candidate will win either the primary or general elections under the present system. Each time a Black and White candidate has faced off for the seat, there has been grumbling about changing the law should the Black candidate lose. Frankly, we've moved past this conversation everywhere but in the pages of the Knoxville News Sentinel. Amelia Parker defeated two White candidates to win an at-large seat on the City Council, one a Republican and the other a Democrat. Still, I can only imagine what the dialogue will be like the first time a White candidate runs citywide and ends up representing the city council's 6th District. There'll be a quick about-face on the part of the Sentinel and most of the Left. That much was acknowledged by Bill Lyons pontificating his own affirmation of the current system. Lyons overlooked the fact Seema Singh's district elected a Republican once. Evidently, that doesn't matter much as it would only be catastrophic should a person of color not be nominated and elected from the "minority" district.

The truth is the winner of any election is the candidate who gets the most votes. It doesn't matter what color the candidate's skin is, what his or her religion might be, or his or her political party. As with everything, the Left likes to believe one size fits all, while rational people realize it does not.

Unfortunately, the City of Knoxville government is loath to repair, much less fix its own defects. That is why the legislation pending in Nashville would restore the ability of districts to pick their own representatives. Electing every city council member citywide dilutes the responsiveness of representatives who, in name only, represent a district. One can easily ignore a neighborhood knowing he/she can find votes elsewhere in the city wards. The current system also puts neighborhoods and homeowners' associations at a disadvantage, and it aids the special interests who finance city campaigns. Obviously, it costs less to finance a district race than a citywide race. One can also easily argue the current system has depressed the vote and the voting patterns in the city, running in off-year elections has consistently spiraled downward. Much as the Left would like you to believe otherwise, ALL the voices in Knoxville aren't heard. When was the last time you saw your city councilman in your neighborhood in a non-election year? Do you even know who your city councilman is? It also assumes that every neighborhood is the same --- one size fits all again. Are the concerns the same in Vestal as they are in Sequoyah Hills? Are there different issues in Parkridge than in West Hills? While it is certainly true Knoxville has many common problems, it is also true that every neighborhood is different and deserves representation. Norwood is different from Burlington and Mechanicville is not the same as Bearden.

The members of the legislature at least appear to understand the differences while the city government likes things just as they are. Can anybody be surprised that the inmates running the asylum think things are just hunky dory?

The entire point of having a representative from a district is that the person comes from that district and is chosen by that district and in turn, represents that district. It sure is strange to see those who would tear down a statue of a former Confederate or Abraham Lincoln in a heartbeat, support a method that was used to promote segregation and prevent a group of citizens from having representation. We're still doing it.

Property Tax Increases Not Good For Renters Or Homeowners

Average rental prices are up in Tennessee by 12% over last year and up 35% since 2020. That's according to Rent, an apartment search engine. Tennessee is one of 13 states that saw rents increase by double digits. Tennessee is ranked ninth in the nation for the largest rent increases. The median rent price in Tennessee is $1,605 according to Rent. The median rent in Nashville is $2,117. The median rental price in Tennessee in 2020 was $1,187, which is $418 less than it is presently.

Both Nashville and Knoxville raised property taxes substantially. Davidson County property taxes went up 35% and Knoxville's went up 40%. At least Davidson County's Metro government could point to a devastating tornado in downtown Nashville. Both cities have expensive stadiums being discussed. What is left unsaid is property tax increases raise the mortgages and rents of the residents of those paying the property taxes. Contrary to popular belief on the Left, those paying the increased property taxes

(and higher rents and mortgages) aren't the wealthy. By and large, they are retirees and working families. The tax burden falls disproportionately on the middle class, which is an indisputable fact.

A fact that seems to be ignored by the real estate lobby in Knoxville and Knox County is there is only so much land for use in building upward, meaning apartment buildings. The Realtors' chief lobbyist seems to be a big proponent of always building upward. Suburban counties became suburban precisely by their proximity to a metropolitan area. Williamson and Sumner counties are notable examples of suburban counties surrounding Nashville. The point being everybody coming here doesn't have to live inside the City of Knoxville or Knox County. A public policy of continually building upward will eventually threaten existing neighborhoods. That same policy will send people fleeing to the suburbs, as it has in most metropolitan areas. Once great cities have become shells of themselves because they pursued policies that caused everyone who could afford to leave, to do so. That single-minded pursuit of those policies drove out the tax base of those cities and beggared them in the process. Continuously raising taxes and providing fewer services is not a recipe for a vibrant metropolis. It is, however, a wonderful policy to build a wasteland.

There's something to be said for rehabilitating properties.

Con Hunley returning to stage

out of the audience to perform a song he actually wrote especially for Con in the heyday of his career. Hunley knew it was finally time to get back out there, and he couldn't be happier to be doing the show at the Union County Opry in Maynardville on Saturday.

Union County holds a special place in his heart and the hearts of his whole family. His father and mother, Kenneth and Clodell (Brewer) Hunley, spent their early years growing up in Union County. Even after they married and moved to Knoxville they both had so many relatives still living in Union County that when they began having a family of their own, the kids knew exactly where they came from. Brewer Holler in Sharps Chapel is named after Hunley's mother's family. And Keck Cemetery is named for Hunley on his maternal side as well. Hunley's father's family were from the Pinhook area of Hickory Valley and were part of the forced move when Norris Dam was built. So Hunley's Union County roots run deep.

"I'm honored to be bringing my band up to Union County for this show. I hope all my friends, family, and fans come out - it's going to be a great night. I have some absolutely killer players in my band and my brother Kenny and sister Ruthie will be there singing harmonies. We're all looking forward to the show. We'll have a lot of fun, and I'll be hanging out after the show to say howdy to everyone."

The show at the Union County Opry is on Saturday, April 1 at 7:00 p.m. Tickets are $20.00 at the door or you can get them in advance online at union-countyopry.com and at the Kitchen Design Center in Maynardville.

Commissioners vote against subpoenaing Sheriff Spangler

meetings. Lundy asked again last Monday with the girl, Aniya Thompson, and her supporters present at the commission's work session. Several audience members spoke on behalf of the subpoena including Keith Britt, who asked the commission to "restore people's faith, transparency, and faith in county government."

Lundy recalled the incident at McAlister's Deli when three deputies went inside to order with Ms. Thompson working as cashier. Thompson said she was ending her shift and passed taking the order off to another employee. The deputies felt she had slighted them and a sheriff's department employee posted the incident on the internet.

The girl was fired from her job and said the situation "was about leadership" and asked the sheriff to appear and tell his side of the story. Lundy asked the Thompson supporters to stand and then moved for approval of the resolution.

"I know I need a 2/3 vote and hope I get it," she said. She did not succeed in the roll call vote.

"Aniya, we tried," she told the girl.

The board then turned to routine business with County Mayor Glenn Jacobs appointing Gregory Logue to the Knox Chapman Utility District, Charles Marth to the West Knox Utility District and Sharon Cramer to the Knox County Employee Insurance Benefits Committee.

Commissioner John Schoonmaker said he should have an appointment ready by today to replace Steve Weiner on the Library Advisory Board.

Ellie Kittrell gave a report in the work session on the Bright Steps Action Plan and the need for the education of preschool children.

The commission also discussed altering the county code's Roads and Bridges section by adding county enforcement of planning commission conditions about road improvements in subdivisions. Commissioner Carson Dailey asked Engineering Director Jim Snowden if that included Farragut and Knoxville in county enforcement. Snowden said Knoxville stays separate but Farragut and the rest of the county is included.

The change would apparently involve an investment by a developer toward the upkeep of subdivision streets given to and accepted by the county. There's a growing number of such streets accepted by the county each month as more subdivisions are created or expanded. Currently, there are seven new streets in two subdivisions before commission.

Today's regular session of the commission may also see a vote on the new

Knox County EMS Medical Services Cost Review Board that includes membership for Chairwoman Courtney Durrett. Commissioner Carson Dailey questioned Deputy Law Director Mike Moyers if the commission could select its own member or accept who Mayor Jacobs recommended. Moyers said it could do so. Dailey then touted his experience with the fire and rescue committee and compared the new committee to an executor or the search for a pastor.

The commissioners will hear the new drive-through ordinance and could vote to change the county code and move requests to a use-on-review category.

Our hearts remain restless until they rest in thee, Oh Lord.

St. Augustine

Recently I told my wife, Becky, "I am no longer employable." My regular readers know I am now retired from medical practice. In fact, I decided to let my medical license expire on my birthday this May because paying to renew the license, as well as Tennessee's tax on professionals, was foolish. Actually, the decision was more psychological than monetary. I worked hard to become an MD and for the license that has been in effect for 48 years.

In Ecclesiastes, the Teacher said, "There is a time for everything and a season for every activity under the heavens." There is a huge difference between being responsible for someone's medical care, versus explaining medical issues or medical jargon to friends and family. It was an honor and a privilege to be someone's doctor, but that demands you stay on top of your game.

I still routinely peruse three medical journals. However, the complexity of evolving medical science and my age convinced me it was time to step down before I was told to sit down.

I've advised many people that you should not retire without a plan. You can only play so much golf, garden, help with grandkids or travel. Humans need purpose which the French call raison d'être (reason for being). I believe our ultimate purpose is a relationship with God. The 17th-century scientist/theologian Blaise Pascal said we have a God-shaped vacuum in our hearts that only God can fill. So, I seek Him every day. And fortunately, I also have an avocation as a writer. It is a creative enterprise and less constrained than the complexities and demands of medicine.

Medical science is a blessing, but the potions and pharmaceuticals hawked on TV are a pain. People have asked me if I was ever persuaded to prescribe a drug because of a commercial. In my four and half decades of medical practice, I can't remember a single instance of a patient asking me to prescribe drug X because of an advertisement. Maybe they sensed I would not be receptive. However, advertisements prompted this week's column.

It's been eight years since I wrote about "biologicals." In fact, it was so long ago that I had forgotten I once wrote about this arcane aspect of medical science. So, if you have an eidetic memory and recall my discussions of monoclonal antibodies (moAb) you can skip this week's column. However, the "back to the issues crowd" should be happy the Doctor is focused on medicine this week rather than his other interests.

Biologicals, biologics or biopharmaceuticals are "complex molecules produced through biotechnology in microorganisms, plant and animal cells." These agents may be used in diagnostic testing, prevention of disease or treatment.

Medical terms can be confusing, especially the names of drugs. Often a medication's generic name derives from its chemical class. Examples are penicillin, ampicillin, etc. which end in the suffix -in.

Brand names of drugs are often influenced by marketing considerations. An example is Antivert, the brand name of meclizine, a drug used to combat vertigo (anti-vertigo). Sometimes a drug is remarketed with a different name. An example is dextropropoxyphene which was originally marketed as the anti-anxiety drug Novrad. Hadn't heard of it? Well, it turns out Novrad was woefully inferior to Valium (diazepam), but had some analgesic properties. So, Eli Lilly reversed the drug's name and remarketed it as Darvon, an analgesic medication.

You may have noticed ads for medications whose names all end in the suffix, -mab, which indicates a monoclonal antibody class. There are currently dozens of monoclonal antibody drugs approved for treatment and more are on the way. Examples are adalimumab (Humira) for inflammatory conditions like rheumatoid arthritis, and trastuzumab (Herceptin) for breast cancer. Monoclonal antibody pharmaceuticals are "designer drugs," some of which are designed to even treat high cholesterol, asthma and migraines.

Virtually everything in the body operates by proteins binding to receptors to produce or suppress a function. Think of electrical outlets and the plug on a lamp cord. If you insert the plug into the wall outlet, electricity flows to the light-bulb to produce light. When our kids were small, we covered unused outlets with plastic covers to prevent a youngling from sticking a fork, etc. into the outlet and getting electrocuted. By analogy, monoclonal antibodies are designed to bind to specific receptors, suppressing or stimulating cellular function.

The monoclonal antibody class name derives from its bioengineering. Injecting mice or other experimental animals with the protein of a microbe, cancer cell or a target cell's receptor generates an immune response. This produces specialized white blood cells which generate antibodies, and a host of other white cells which aid in eliminating the foreign agent and remembering the invader in case the foreign protein is encountered again.

The spleen is a large lymph gland-like organ in the left side of the abdomen where memory cells reside. These can be harvested, and here's the scientific magic: the memory cells can be fused with an immortal cell line to produce a "hybridoma." These bioengineered cells are continuously grown in tissue culture and produce the specified antibody. These antibodies are then harvested and purified for therapeutic use or testing. It's almost like Star Trek!

God's creation is truly majestic, even if His highest creation, mankind, is sometimes less than noble. As I finish this essay Alvin Bragg, the odious Democrat and Manhattan District Attorney, is moving to indict President Trump on a bogus case of salacious "he said/she said." If this travesty goes forward, Bragg will effectively be interfering in a presidential election. Furthermore, Bragg plans to arrest President Trump which might expose him to the danger of a Jack Ruby-like attack.

I don't know what will happen in Gotham. I am fearful for President Trump's safety and for my country. Desperate people do desperate things. And Democrats are terrified by Trump. They have repeatedly lied, impugned and impeached him. Democrats are desperate, and wounded animals are especially dangerous.

Democrats can now add weaponization and destruction of the American justice system to their infamous resume. Pray for our country and for President Trump, because if, God forbid, something happens to him, we are done.

DAR to honor Mars Hill Cemetery veterans

Veterans buried in the Mars Hill Cemetery will be honored in a special ceremony as part of the Daughters of the American Revolution America 250! Anniversary. The veterans buried there took part in conflicts from the American Revolution to the Philippine-American War.

The "Honor Our Tennessee Patriots" event is set for April 8 at 10 a.m. The Knoxville DAR Chapter applied for and was awarded a 250! Celebration Grant for the event. The historic cemetery also holds the graves of the Cavett family, massacred at Cavett Station by Cherokee Chief Doublehead, and is recognized as a Veterans Heritage Site. The event will be supported by the West High School NJROTC Color Guard and co-sponsored by the Friends of Cavett Station.

Eight new military markers will be dedicated at the ceremony and a program about those veterans is part of the event.

Those planning to attend are urged to park along Doublehead Lane and are asked not to block the mailboxes and driveways belonging to residents of the neighborhood.

More information is available by calling 423-782-7436 or emailing CavettStationDAR@gmail.com.

In 1925 the Tennessee Sons of the Revolution placed this monument in the Mars Hill Cemetery to remember the Cavett Station Attack. Among those to be honored will be the Alexander Cavett family, and headstones will be placed for eight veterans with service ranging from Revolutionary to Phillipine-American Wars.

The massacre at Cavett's Station

Chickamauga Cherokee Chief Doublehead and Chief John Watts led 1,000 warriors to avenge the death of Doublehead's brother in an attack on the territorial capital in what is now Knoxville. As they approached the little town the frontier militia there fired a cannon, part of their daily drill, and the warriors turned around and went to Cavett Station, 13 miles to the west.

Alexander Cavett had settled there on 640 acres and built a fortified cabin or blockhouse in 1793. His family took shelter inside and prepared for the attack. The warring party halted and sent Bob Bengé, a young warrior and son of a white trader,

It is Hard to Get Teachers to Court as Witnesses

Occasionally when I meet with individuals who are dealing with a custody aspect of a case, one of the things that comes up is things related to school, such as the child's attendance, the child's appearance at school, and the child's ability to stay awake while at school. A party may tell me that they wish to call one of the children's teacher's as a witness at a future custody hearing. In my experience, that can be very hard to do. Almost all individuals I have encountered are reluctant to appear at court and testify. However, there is a Tennessee law in place that makes it even harder to get teachers to appear at court to testify. Tennessee Code Annotated section 24-2-109(b) states, "Notwithstanding any other law, a court shall require an educator to be a witness in any civil hearing, deposition, mediation, arbitration, trial or other similar proceeding involving a domestic dispute matter, including, but not limited to, domestic abuse, divorce, parentage, or child custody, if the educator is not a named party and the educator's attendance would require the educator to be absent from teaching, counseling, or supervisory duties in a school, unless the court determines that the educator's attendance is necessary to ensure fairness in the hearing, mediation, arbitration, trial or other similar matter." So if you are thinking you will be able to win your custody case based on the testimony of teachers, you probably want to triple check and confirm that the teacher in question can and will come testify, because Tennessee law provides them a pretty easy path to avoid doing so if they so desire.

Magnificent Bluebird

Simple joys often bring the greatest pleasures, like the sight of a beautiful bluebird. While it is the most often associated with spring, the bluebird is a welcome sight as well. Many songs have been written about the little bluebird over the years. The arrival of spring in the middle of March brought chilly temperatures and damp, rainy days. But as I stepped outside one morning, a symphony of birds greeted me with their songs. The terrible weather did not discourage them from singing at all.

By Ralphine Major
ralphine3@yahoo.com

I would like to claim credit for this amazing photo of the bluebird shown here--- but I cannot. The photographer sent this "magnificent bluebird" photo to me to brighten my day. I thought it might do the same for Focus readers. There is no better time than spring to look all around us at the beauty of nature--- flowers and bushes blooming; green blades of grass finding their way through the earth; and of course, the robins, red cardinals, and bluebirds with their happy songs. May we be reminded of God's gifts to us each day during this season of new life. Happy Spring!

Words of Faith: "Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature? And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin." Matthew 6:26-28 (KJV).

The massacre at Cavett's Station

Cont. from page 1 to the cabin to speak with the settlers. He told them that if they surrendered they would be spared and taken captive.

The whites left the cabin and stood in the clearing when Chief Doublehead rushed them and killed all except a small baby. Chief Watts picked up the child and was holding it when Doublehead grabbed it and bashed the baby to death on a tree.

The warriors went off after setting fire to the cabin. The militia, seeing the smoke, went to the cabin and discovered the bodies. The Chickamauga Cherokee retreated back to their home base near what is now Chattanooga.

Many tribe members nicknamed Doublehead "Baby Killer" following the incident. Doublehead lived several years after peace was declared, illegally sold some land to whites, and was assassinated by his own tribe.

Settlers killed in the massacre were buried in a cemetery created nearby and later a church was located there and burials continued for later settlers.

It has been estimated that more than 500 graves, starting with the Cavett victims, are located on the hilltop. Mars Hill Cemetery is located atop the hill just off Broome Road in West Knoxville.

The late Dr. Charles A. Faulkner published a book on the incident, "Massacre at Cavett's Station: Frontier Tennessee during the Cherokee Wars."

Twin Delight

Church, like all things, can sometimes be a bit boring. That's when folks can be seen nodding off or fidgeting in their seats. With that said, I must say the Beaver Ridge United Methodist Church is as

joerector@comcast.net

and me when we were that age. When twins are allowed to sit together, trouble begins brewing. Tickle boxes get turned upside down, and squirming bottoms slide across the pew.

Just as the service began, the mother rose with one twin in the front yanking her toward the hallway and the other one holding mom's hand and hurrying to keep up. I shook my head and laughed. If my mother had left the sanctuary with us in such a manner, the congregation might well have heard the wails of two boys being switched for some form of misbehavior.

Before long the twins zipped across the front of the sanctuary and to their pew. An exasperated mom walked behind the girls. They might have been back, but neither girl was ready to sit down. Instead, they ran around pews for a couple of circuits. Children's Church dismissed soon, and the girls were first out the door.

Adults wore a variety of expressions. Some, like me, smiled or even chuckled at the life, the spirit, and the joy of those two little girls spreading through the sanctuary. Others looked surprised at what they witnessed; some sat red-faced with embarrassment as they empathized with the parents. Sadly, some individuals scowled at the running children. They disapproved of the girls' actions and considered them inappropriate; more than likely, they thought that the parents should have more harshly dealt with such actions.

I remember always being afraid of adults in church. I felt that the choir members were staring at me with laser-focused eyes. To keep them from putting evil eyes on us, Jim and I scooted low on the pew to use the back of the seat in front of us as a shield. Of course, our parents assumed that we were misbehaving and grabbed us and roughly set us up correctly.

I sympathize with the parents of those twins. Like our parents, they sometimes looked furious and exhausted at our behavior. Jim and I didn't always mean to cause trouble, but our movements, giggles, or loud whispers drew unwelcome attention. Those little girls bring joy to our church family. I look forward to seeing them each week. I would tell those who look unfavorably at the children that the younger people of the church are its future. We who are older have found an extended family there, and we must allow children to be themselves and to contribute to worship in their unique ways. The "big guy" above must have smiled and been pleased that two little ones were expressing delight in their experiences in His house. This world could be a better place if we all lightened up a little and enjoyed our communion with God and His creations, including an adorable set of twin girls.

The Last Campaign: Overton vs. Orgill, Part III

Pages from the Past

By Ray Hill
rayhill865@gmail.com

The death of Edward Hull Crump on October 16, 1954, changed Shelby County and Memphis politics forever. As Memphis was on the cusp of the first mayoral election without the influence of E. H. Crump in half a century, the contenders appeared to be set for the general election. Mayor Frank Tobey had assumed office after his predecessor had angrily resigned from the mayoralty. Tobey was set to face that same predecessor, Watkins Overton, in the November election. Neither man would have been prominent in local politics without some affiliation with the late Memphis Boss. Both had come to the office with the assent and approval of E. H. Crump.

Throughout history, there are constant reminders man does not control time nor the march of events. On September 11, 1955, the race for mayor between Frank Tobey and Watkins Overton ended. Mayor Tobey was at home when he suffered a heart attack. The mayor was rushed to Baptist Hospital in Memphis where he slipped into a coma and died three days later. The Tobey administration was thrown into chaos with the death of its leader. The city commission was tasked with replacing Frank Tobey as mayor and elected perhaps the best possible choice available by calling back to service yet another former mayor, Walter Chandler.

Chandler was one of the most distinguished citizens of Memphis. Like both Watkins Overton and Frank Tobey, Walter Chandler had been promoted by E. H. Crump. Chandler was Crump's personal choice to take his place in the U.S. House of Representatives in 1934 when the Boss decided to come home to Memphis. Chandler worked hard at being the congressman from Shelby County and enjoyed his job. Congressman Chandler did not much want to leave Washington, D.C. when the Memphis Boss summoned him to take the place of Mayor Watkins Overton who had resigned in 1939. Chandler assumed office as mayor and served loyally and effectively until 1947 when he, too, resigned. Chandler's resignation was due to profound disappointment. Walter Chandler had hoped to move up the political ladder; he had previously announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for governor in 1938 but withdrew when it became readily apparent United States Senator Kenneth McKellar was lukewarm to his candidacy. Chandler had thought and expected McKellar to retire in 1946 when the senator was seventy-seven years old. Mayor Chandler believed he would have Crump's support for McKellar's seat in the United States Senate. McKellar had no intention of retiring and his friend and political partner E. H. Crump supported the senator's reelection bid. Chandler decided to leave political life and resume the practice of law.

Walter Chandler answered the call one last time and accepted appointment as the interim mayor of Memphis. Watkins Overton was already off and running and it soon became clear that another candidate was moving forward to fill the vacuum left by the death of Mayor Frank Tobey.

Edmund Orgill had been one of those business and civic leaders who had boldly defied E. H. Crump during the 1948 campaign by openly supporting the candidacy of then-Congressman Estes Kefauver. Crump loathed Kefauver, yet it had been the Memphis Boss who bore much of the responsibility, although inadvertently, for the congressman's campaign for the Democratic nomination for the United States Senate being successful. It had been Crump who had arbitrarily withdrawn his support from incumbent Senator Tom Stewart to back the candidacy of a local judge of the Circuit Court from Cookeville, Tennessee. Much to Crump's surprise, Senator Stewart insisted upon running once again and ran hard. When it became quite clear Mitchell's candidacy was going nowhere, Crump thought of switching his support back to Senator Stewart in an effort to stop the hated Kefauver. The Kefauver campaign caught wind of the rumors about Crump dumping Mitchell in favor of the senator and publicly accused the Memphis Boss of proposing to do exactly that. As they hoped, Crump promptly issued an angry denial and stuck with Judge John Mitchell who ran a poor third in the election. Estes Kefauver won the Democratic nomination for the United States Senate with 42% of the vote.

The 1948 election saw Crump seriously challenged inside his own dominion of Shelby County. Edmund Orgill was prominent and respected amongst Memphis business, civil and social circles. The scion of one of the leading businesses in the Bluff City, Orgill, along with attorney Lucius Burch, formed the nucleus of an effective and enthused group of folks who strongly and openly supported Estes Kefauver's candidacy in Shelby County. The group's efforts were promoted by Edward Meeman, editor of the Memphis Press-Scimitar, who was one of the perpetual irritants to Crump's rule of the Bluff City and Shelby County. Meeman's badgering of the Memphis Boss was so effective that then-Mayor James Pleasants had attacked the bachelor editor, inferring Meeman was a homosexual at Crump's behest. Pleasants never seemed to recover from what he had done and was serving as the Law Director for Memphis when he committed suicide at age forty-two.

The emergence of Edmund Orgill as a candidate for mayor was only natural. Orgill announced he was running as an Independent and promptly took a leave of absence from Orgill Brothers, the family business. Orgill also resigned as a director of Union Planters National Bank. Edmund Orgill's platform included civil service for city employees, consolidation of city and county services, as well as seeking home rule for Memphis. Orgill said he would do his best to implement a "Little Hatch Act" for Memphis. Edmund Orgill's proposals were a far cry from the previous administrations dominated by E. H. Crump.

The day after Orgill's announcement, Edward J. Meeman published an editorial endorsing the new mayoral candidate. Meeman wrote Edmund Orgill was offering Memphians a "Program of Progress" for the future of their city. In his announcement, Orgill had urged those who wanted to help to telephone him. He gave his number at Orgill Brothers, which Meeman praised as "getting right down to business."

Unlike a contest between Frank Tobey and Watkins Overton, both of whom had ties to the late Ed Crump, Edmund Orgill had come to notice by defying the Memphis Boss by supporting candidates opposed by the machine. Edmund Orgill and Watkins Overton represented two very different visions for the future of Memphis. Both campaigns did not lack money, but there were constant reminders of past associations throughout the campaign, especially those of former mayor Watkins Overton.

Kenneth D. McKellar, Tennessee's longest-serving United States senator, was living in retirement in a suite of rooms at the Gayoso Hotel in downtown Memphis after having been defeated in 1952. McKellar and Watkins Overton had worked together for the betterment of Memphis for decades and were personal friends. The former senator's nephew Judson was Overton's campaign manager. It hardly surprised anyone Senator McKellar was supporting his friend Watkins Overton. McKellar wrote in a letter to Overton, "This note is merely to say I will support and vote for you in the upcoming municipal election and with real pleasure and satisfaction."

Overton had begun practicing law as an associate with the law firm where McKellar was the senior partner, a fact the former senator noted in his letter. "I can never forget that day in the long ago, when you came into our law office to begin there your professional life. You were one of the most conscientious, able, modest, delightful and attractive youngsters in Memphis." McKellar recalled both of Overton's wealthy grandfathers, Colonel John Overton and Napoleon Hill, were clients of the senator's law firm as well as "two of the best citizens Memphis ever had." McKellar warmly recalled Watkins Overton's administration as mayor and closed his letter by writing, "If you were a member of my family, I could not think more of you. I am very proud of you and your former record as mayor, and wish you every success."

Overton and Orgill had crossed rhetorical swords before. Edmund Orgill, Lucius Burch and Edward J. Meeman had joined together to form the Civic Research Committee for Memphis to study local issues, which advocated a mayor-city council local government and lauded "city planning." Then-Mayor Watkins Overton had written a stinging letter to Lucius Burch, stating, "Your talk of wanting more efficient government is very thin camouflage; it's easy to see through. What you are trying to do is destroy Memphis' present efficient government so you can take over." As to the CRC, Mayor Overton told a reporter from the Memphis Commercial Appeal, "As a matter of fact, it was conceived by Lucius Burch, Edmund Orgill and others as a strictly political move to discredit the city government, and to try and force city and county management on the people of this city."

The members of CRC had intended to support Frank Tobey for mayor in the 1955 mayoral campaign, especially as it became more likely Watkins Overton would run. While Overton was a veteran politician, Edmund Orgill was no stranger to politics. Orgill had been prominently involved in campaigns in the 1948, 1952, and 1954 election cycles. In January of 1955, Orgill had traveled to Washington, D. C. where he hosted a luncheon for the members of Tennessee's Democratic members of the House of Representatives. According to Congressman Percy Priest of Nashville, Orgill had wished to discuss possible legislation pertaining to the expansion of the North Atlantic Treaty.

Ed Meeman's Press-Scimitar avidly promoted Edmund Orgill's mayoral candidacy throughout the remainder of the campaign, while the Commercial Appeal sided with former mayor Watkins Overton.

Mayor Walter Chandler in speaking before the Public Affairs Council noted Memphians would have three choices as to their form of government on the November ballot. Chandler proceeded to rap the "strong mayor" proposal supported by Watkins Overton in the head. "If a Mayor's a good Mayor, he's a strong Mayor," Chandler said. "But you cannot have one man wise enough to run a great city like Memphis." Chandler told his listeners when a mayor could not agree with the city commissioners "it's time for a change" and noted he had had no trouble during his own seven years as mayor of Memphis.

"A man's got no business resigning and quitting in a huff and going home," when meeting opposition by commissioner, Chandler said. That was a direct blow to Watkins Overton, but Walter Chandler also pointed out the primary defect of the city manager-council form of government preferred by Edmund Orgill.

"The fact is, the manager is at the mercy of the council . . . Sooner or later you have log rolling." That was supposedly the very evil the commission government was supposed to prevent. "The manager is answerable only to the council," Chandler pointed out, "and you'll find some cities that have it that are very anxious to get rid of it."

Walter Chandler favored neither type of government advocated by Watkins Overton or Edmund Orgill. Chandler liked the mayor-city commission type of government best.

With a very late start, the Orgill campaign hurried to organize itself. George W. Grider became manager of the Orgill for Mayor campaign. Grider was a Navy veteran, a former submarine commander and a local attorney who would later serve on the Shelby County Commission, as well as a term in Congress.

As the campaign progressed, Orgill reminded voters of some of the aspects of Overton's sixteen years as mayor of Memphis. When Overton complained Orgill was slinging mud, the Press-Scimitar retorted, "If Orgill comes up with a shovel full of 'mud,' that's Overton's fault. It's his record. Not Orgill's."

In the end, Edmund Orgill won a smashing victory over Watkins Overton. Memphis preferred to look to the future rather than return to the past. Edmund Orgill quite nearly won the Democratic nomination for governor in 1958. Orgill remained prominent in the business and political life of Memphis until his death in 1982.

Watkins Overton died in 1958 from throat cancer, leaving behind his third wife and two small children, including a four-month-old son.

Knox County boys basketball's BEST

By Steve Williams

One player on The Knoxville Focus / Coaches' All-Knox County team has received offers from four major college programs and another has drawn interest from Auburn Coach Bruce Pearl, who previously was the head coach at Tennessee.

Fifteen of 21 local high school coaches nominated players from their teams for All-Knox County honors, with their selections based on regular season play.

Here's a thumbnail sketch on each member of the 11-player first team (in alphabetical order):

Dallas Carbaugh, Farragut: The 6-5 senior forward helped the Admirals take second place in the District 4-4A regular season race and post an 18-11 record. Carbaugh was a force inside as he averaged 12 points and eight rebounds in earning All-District honors. "He is holding a few offers, including Maryville College, but has not signed," said first-year Farragut head coach J.P. Burris.

Luke Carter, CAK: The 6-foot guard entered his senior season as a 2022 All-State honoree and picked up where he left off, averaging 18 points, 4.1 rebounds, 3.8 assists and 2.2 steals for the Warriors, who placed second in their Division II-A district and had an overall record of 20-11. Luke ended his prep career with over 1,600 points.

Shane Cherry, Austin-East: The 5-10 sophomore point guard was the Knox County scoring champion in 2022-23, averaging 28.1 points. That was plenty enough to attract interest from Bruce Pearl, former UT head coach who now is at Auburn. Georgia Tech and Tennessee State also have shown interest in Shane's exciting style of play, which includes a lot of 3-point shooting. In addition to his scoring, Cherry averaged 4 rebounds, 3.1 steals, 4.4 assists and 1.2 blocks as the Roadrunners took a big step forward under new coach Denard Bertram.

Jadarian "JJ" Faulkner, Karns: The 5-11 point guard's four-year prep career as a starter ended with the Beavers (21-7) placing second in the District 3-4A regular season race and continuing with a strong run to the sectional round and one win away from a state tourney berth under veteran coach Lee Henson. JJ was voted the District Player of the Year and was a stat stuffer as he averaged 22.1 points, 7.2 assists, 5.5 rebounds and 4.1 steals. He earned the reputations of being a dynamic guard, a tenacious on-ball defender and a very high IQ player. Tusculum University has shown interest, but Faulkner is undecided.

Denaj Kimber, Fulton: The 6-3 junior point guard shared the District 5-3A Player of the Year award with teammate Tyler Lee as the Falcons captured the district title and were 23-5. Denaj shot 50 percent from the field and 44 percent from 3-point range in the regular season to average 15 points in addition to handing out 5 assists and collecting 5 rebounds per game. Coach Jody Wright also noted "the twins (Denaj and Taj)" had received an offer from Tusculum March 27.

Tyler Lee, Fulton: Lee and the Falcons recently returned home with the gold basketball from the Class 3A state tournament. Tyler also was named the MVP in Murfreesboro. During the regular season, the 6-5 junior power forward averaged 14 points and eight boards. The big guy also made 38 percent of his 3-point attempts and shot 51 percent overall from the field.

Deondrea Lindsey, Catholic: The 6-8 sophomore forward already has received offers from Georgetown, Ole Miss, SMU and Georgia Tech, said first-year Catholic coach Luke Smith. Lindsey helped lead the Irishmen to an 18-7 record and third place in their Division II-AA region. He averaged 16.2 points and 8.8 rebounds and shot 59 percent from the field.

Dalton McNew, Carter: The 6-2 senior shooting guard was the Player of the Year in District 3-3A and led Coach Tyler Cate's Hornets (20-9) to the district championship. Dalton averaged 16.9 points, 5.9 rebounds, 2.2 assists and 1.8 steals in the regular season.

Jaquarius "Zeus" Sanders, Austin-East: The 6-2 senior shooting forward averaged 21.3 points and was part of the Roadrunners' 1-2 punch. Sanders also averaged 7 rebounds, 2.2 steals, 2.4 assists and 3 blocks in helping A-E place second in District 5-3A with a 20-7 record. "He has attracted interest from Cleveland State and Roane State," said Coach Denard

Caleb Shaffer, Halls: Despite being targeted by the opposition's defense, the senior shooting guard shot 56 percent from the field and 42 percent from 3-point range during the regular season to average 15.2 points. He was selected the District 4-3A Player of the Year as he led the Red Devils to first place and a 16-11 record. "Every defense we played was designed to keep him from getting the ball," said Halls Coach Clint Sharp. "He will sign with Tusculum."

Lukas Walls, Webb School: The all-round senior standout had a dream season as far as individual awards. He was selected the Knox County Player of the Year and later was chosen the TSSAA's Mr. Basketball in Division II-AA. Both honors were based on regular season play. Luke led the Spartans to a 21-7 record and a berth in the Final Four of Division II-AA. The Samford signee averaged 22 points, 6 rebounds and three assists per game. He shot a sizzling 45 percent from 3-point range and also was an 81 percent free throw shooter.

HIGH SCHOOL BASKETBALL TOURNAMENT TIME

Fulton's first-half showing was golden

By Steve Williams

It's rare when you don't see Jody Wright growl at some point in a game.

But when the Fulton High coach was watching his team play Haywood in the BlueCross Basketball Championships on March 18, he had no reason to be upset, particularly in the opening half.

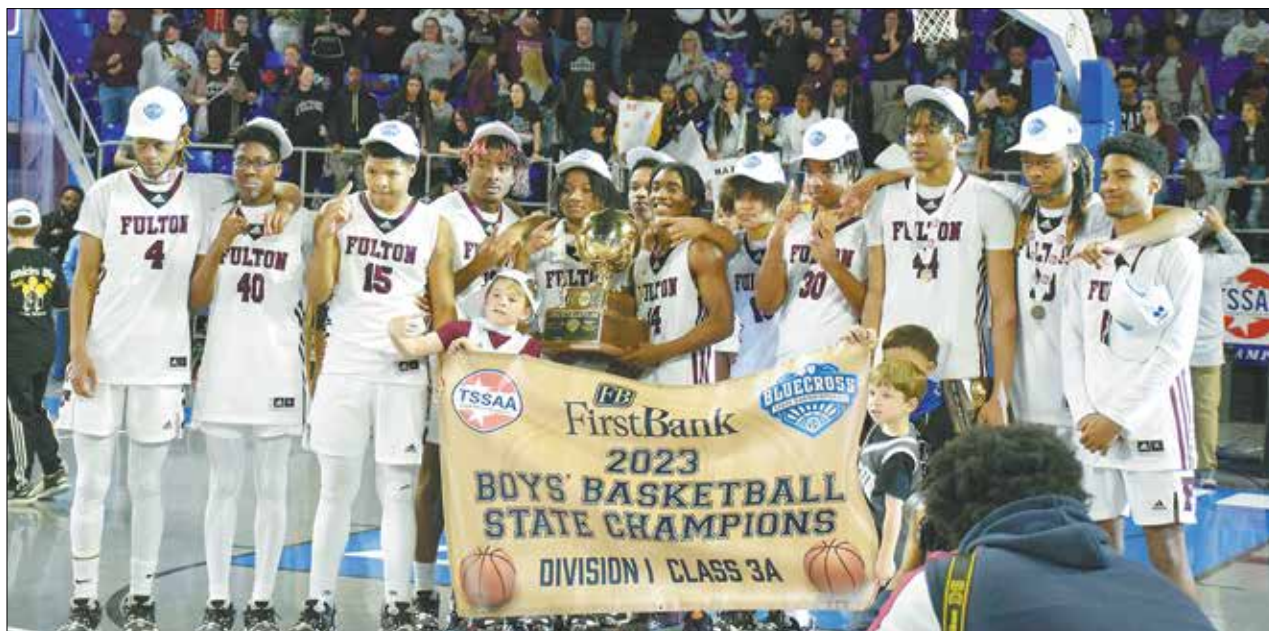

His Falcons put together a first-half performance that may rank among the best ever in the history of the TSSAA boys state tournament, which began in 1921.

Much of the opening two periods Jody stood in front of his bench relaxed as he watched his team at work. One had to believe he was thrilled on the inside and very proud at what he was seeing.

Wright said it was "the best first half" he's seen from one of his teams at the state.

"We had a really good half here in 2009 against Booker T. Washington with James Gallman and Jalen Steele and those guys, but I don't know that we've had a half like this.

"As a coach, it's pleasing when you can have a half like that on the brightest stage."

This reporter noted "perfect start" when Haywood Coach Rodney Chatman immediately called a timeout with 6:03 on the clock after the Falcons hit a 3-pointer for an early 8-2 lead.

The Falcons went on to leave the Tomcats behind by 26 points (45-19) at halftime en route to an 82-52 victory in the Class 3A state title game at MTSU's Murphy Center in Murfreesboro.

It was Fulton's fourth title in nine state championship appearances under Wright and that gives the Falcons (32-5) more gold balls than any other school in East Tennessee. Fulton also earned a state runner-up trophy in 1962 under Coach Bob Fry in the days before classification.

Haywood finished 30-6. In the dominating first half, Wright saw his starters shoot a scorching 72 percent from the field (18 of 25), 70 percent from 3-point range (7 of 10) and 100 percent from the free throw line (2 of 2).

Forward Taj Kimber went 5-for-5 from the field, power forward Tyler Lee 4-for-4, guard Marcellus

Jackson 4-for-6, point guard Denaj Kimber 4-for-8 and guard Dexter Lewis 1-for-2.

Behind the 3-point line, the 6-5 Lee led the way, making all three of his attempts, and his teammates were a combined 4-for-7.

The Haywood coach said it was like "they were throwing a rock in the ocean. They can really shoot it.

"We preached about it before the game. Those twins and Lee get to their spots real good and make shots.

"By far," added Chatman, "this is the best team we've played all year."

Fulton had nearly a 4 to 1 assist to turnover ratio (11-3) in the opening 16 minutes, too. The twins, Denaj and Taj, each had three of the assists.

had three of his team's five steals by halftime. The Falcons also turned over the Tomcats three other times in the first half by drawing offensive charges and two more times by producing five-second closely guarded violations.

Wright said his team played well on "both ends" of the floor. "We shot the ball at a high level. The plan was to attack through the paint and I thought we did that. We set up some stuff on the perimeter. We were 7 of 10 from the 3-point line, but the big thing too was we held those guys to 19 points. I thought it was a really good half of basketball."

Taj Kimber finished the game with 26 points and almost tied a 45-year-old state record. His 12-for-13 shooting accuracy from the field was just one shot off the state record (12-for-12) set in 1978.

Lee, named the tourney's MVP, added 17 points and seven rebounds. Denaj Kimber contributed 14 points and six assists. Jackson chipped in 12 points to go with his defensive play.

Tylon Chatman, a 6-foot senior guard and son of the Haywood coach, totaled a game-high 32 points on 12-for-28 shooting from the field, including 5-for-16 from 3-point land. No other Tomcat scored in double digits, although 6-7 power forward Janerus Snipe had eight points and six boards.

Not surprisingly, Fulton's marksmanship on 3-pointers dropped after intermission (1-for-4), but its overall field goal percentage remained high at 59 percent (17-for-29). Overall, the Falcons finished the game shooting 64.8 percent from the field, 57.1 percent from 3-point range and 80 percent at the free throw line.

Fulton outscored Haywood 19-9 in the third period for a commanding 64-28 lead.

The Falcons coasted the rest of the way until Wright unloaded the bench with 1:03 left, so five of his reserves could get a taste of playing in a state finale and his starters could bask in the fans' standing ovation.

Halls no-hits Anderson County in district opener

By Ken Lay

The Halls High School softball team has had its share of offensive struggles out of the gate in 2023. But the Lady Devils kicked it into high gear at the plate Tuesday night.

Halls pounded out 16 hits in a 10-0 victory over Anderson County in the District 4-3A opener for both schools at Halls High School on a day when the two teams marked Down Syndrome Awareness Day by wearing crazy socks. The game was called after the sixth inning due to the TSSAA run rule.

The Lady Devils scored early and often against the Lady Mavericks as they scored three runs in the first inning as Gracie Gregory had a two-run double and Hayden Kiersey plated Gregory with a double.

And that was only the beginning as half of the Lady Devils' 16 hits went for extra bases.

Gregory, Kiersey, Baylee Cooper, Makayla Hutchison and Sami Kirk each came up with doubles. Gregory and Staley Vaught each had triples and Emery Bales blasted a solo home run.

While the Lady Devils had perhaps their best offensive game of the young season, the pitching, which has been solid all season, was nearly flawless as Atiana Stamper and Bales hurled a combined no-hitter.

The Lady Mavericks managed just two base runners as Stamper hit two batters.

She started and went three innings and struck out six. Bales came in at the top of the third and fanned four Anderson County hitters.

Bales was also a contributor with her bat. In addition to her round-tripper in the fifth, she ended the game with a sacrifice fly in the sixth.

Halls coach Bryan Gordon is pleased with his team's effort against Anderson County (1-2, 0-1).

"Our pitching is our strong point right now," he said. "We've been pitching well and we've been playing good defense.

Halls High's Hayden Kiersey gets a lead off third base in the Lady Devils' 10-0 victory over Anderson County Tuesday.

Kiersey had an RBI double and scored a run against the Lady Mavericks in the district opener for both teams.

"Our offense is not consistent right now and it hasn't caught up with our pitching and our defense yet."

As part of marking Down Syndrome Awareness Day, the Lady Devils (2-0, 1-0) and Anderson County honored Gracie Hensley, a Halls Middle School student, who plays softball despite being stricken with Down Syndrome.

"This is a great day and a great way to bring awareness for Down Syndrome and to celebrate (Hensley's) accomplishments," Gordon said. "She's part of our middle school program."

'One of the best times I've had in sports'

When the Tennessee Volunteers basketball team won the SEC championship on March 6, 1967, in Starkville, Miss., Knoxville Journal sportswriter Ben Byrd gave the team a nickname, the "Fearless Five."

"Tennessee's fearless five fought its way through the bedlam of three overtime periods tonight to beat Mississippi State, 78-76, and win the Southeastern Conference basketball championship lock, stock, and barrel," Ben wrote for the next morning's Journal. Tennessee head coach Ray Mears took the nickname and ran with it.

Byrd was a legendary figure on the sports scene in Knoxville. His event coverage as well as his "Byrd's Eye View" and "Free Thought Association" columns were anxiously awaited as each edition rolled off the presses.

"He wasn't interested in being a rabble-rouser or stirring things up," said son, Rick, the former men's basketball coach at Belmont

University. "He wanted to report the games and the people involved. It was a different world back then." This team greatly exceeded expectations, but, in late December 1966 and early January 1967, the Vols had looked anything but fearless. In fact, they looked remarkably mortal. There were losses to Bradley and Boston College in the Sugar Bowl tournament and a loss at Vanderbilt. There were also wins over Furman and Alabama. Skittish and skeptical Vol fans openly wondered what might lie ahead.

Tennessee had a legitimate superstar in 1965-66 All-SEC forward Ron Widby and a steady performer as the other forward in Tom Hendrix, a starter as a sophomore that season. There were question marks at the other three positions, with junior center Tom Boerwinkle having seen little playing time, the dreaded term "project" hanging over his head. Sophomore guards Bill Justus and Bill Hann, stars on the previous year's freshman team, had not yet experienced the rigors of SEC play, particularly on the road.

"It was very clear," said

Ray, "that this was our best five, and from the first day of practice we decided to go with them. They turned out to be a happy, compatible group, with a great desire to learn and win. I think a great deal of credit for that must go to Ron Widby. In his two previous seasons, he had been an outstanding basketball player. As a senior, he became a great player and leader as well."

Capacity crowds showed up at an expanded arena called Stokely Athletics Center. Vol fans "took" to an overachieving team that had all the elements of success fall its way as if ordained from on high.

A major key to the season, John Ward said, was a double overtime win at Kentucky. Hendrix, a native of Elizabethtown, Ky., canned two pressure-packed free throws to seal the deal.

The Vols ran the table at home, winning nine SEC contests decisively. They also won in some of the SEC's toughest venues, in Auburn's Quonset Hut, Florida's "Alligator Alley," and Georgia's Woodruff Hall. There were close losses at Ole Miss and Alabama, but this group was undeterred.

It all came down to the season finale at Mississippi State, in one of the classic victories in Vol hoops history. As fans listened nervously on the Vol Network to Ward and Lowell Blanchard, Widby threw in 35 points, making shot after shot in a fierce battle with State's David Williams.

After missing an opportunity to give the Vols a lead in the second overtime, Justus made two free throws that proved to be the game-winners, giving the Vols their first SEC championship in 24 years and their first-ever NCAA bid. Two losses in the big tourney, one to eventual national runner-up Dayton and another to Indiana, did not detract in the least from the season's accomplishments.

Widby averaged 22.1 points and 8.7 rebounds and carried his team through the peaks and valleys of the 18-game round-robin conference schedule. Ron was SEC "Player of the Year" and an All-American selection, adding hoops to his All-American selection as a football punter in 1966, being named the NCAA statistical champ with a 43.8-yard average.

"It was probably one of the best times I've had in sports," said Widby. "We were picked fifth or sixth pre-season, but we had confidence in ourselves. I had told Knoxville News-Sentinel reporter Marvin West before the season we were going to win it."

What was the result? A youthful squad came through and played better than even the most optimistic Vol fan could have hoped. When the SEC title came home to Knoxville, no one wanted to debate Ben's describing the Vol squad as "fearless."

All this goes to show that games in late December and early January are sometimes accurate barometers of the overall record at season's end... and sometimes they're not.

Spring Practice Underway for Vols

By Mark Nagi

The 2022 season is one that will be remembered by Tennessee Vols fans for decades to come. They won 11 games, including the Orange Bowl over Clemson. The Vols beat Florida, LSU, and snapped a 15-year losing streak to Alabama.

But that's all in the past, and the 2023 Tennessee Vols are starting to build their own legacy. Last week spring practice got underway, and one of the main takeaways is just how much things have changed for this program since Tennessee head coach Josh Heupel arrived in January 2021.

"I think for you guys, you walk out there, and you can see the difference in depth, really at every position," said Heupel. "The new guys, the young guys that we've added. Length, athleticism, size on the offensive and defensive lines. Much deeper than we've been. Skill spots, same thing. For us, this spring we're truly going to be able to get reps for an entire roster of guys. Year One, we were a shell of not just numbers, but athletes on the grass that we are today. That allows you to increase the number of reps that you're going to get during the spring and it also creates a ton of competition and urgency, from the meeting rooms, to what you're doing on the practice field."

Tennessee was blessed to have Hendon Hooker under center for most of the past two seasons. He willed the Vols to some of their greatest moments. But he's getting ready for the NFL Draft. The good news for Tennessee is that they have another experienced signal caller that know Heupel's system well ready to go, Joe Milton. Heupel believes that whether working as the backup or the starter, Milton is prepared for the challenges ahead.

"I said this last year, you could feel his energy and focus, and he was very intentional in the way that he worked," said Heupel. "He had a voice inside our team. When he got his opportunity to start on the back end of the season, I spoke to those things before the Vanderbilt game and the Orange Bowl. The same is true today. You hear his voice more often because certain guys aren't here that were in some of those leadership roles, but that's true for a lot of guys on our roster. I've been really proud of the way that Joe has worked here. He's hyper-competitive and intentional in trying to become the best that he can be at his craft and at the same time, push and pull his teammates to compete at a championship level every day."

Heupel's fast paced system turned Tennessee into the highest scoring offense in the nation. But it's not always easy for the defense, which must adjust to being on the field a great deal longer than most units.

In 2022 they had some struggles, but a solid performance against Clemson in the Orange Bowl is a sign that this group might be ready to improve in the Fall.

"We took a big step," said Heupel of his defense. "Some of that was just regaining the personnel that you need to go compete, and then (going through) another year in the system. Fundamentally being better, and then tackling in space. We made a huge jump in the run game on defense. Obviously, we need to take another step in our pass defense and third down defense. That doesn't just strictly correlate to the secondary. It's your second level defenders, it's your front-line guys maybe dropping into zones off of your pressures. At the same time, it's also getting to the quarterback with a four-man rush. All of those pieces have to come together to help us take another step. I believe in who we have, both from coaches and personnel, that we'll be ready to take another step as long as we work and compete at a championship level."

Tennessee will finish spring practice with the annual Orange & White Game on Saturday, April 15 at Neyland Stadium.

By Steve Williams

The countdown is on. Carol Mitchell is approaching her 1,000th win as Gibbs High's softball coach.

Mitchell entered this season with 990 victories and her team is off to a 7-0 start after defeating Clinton 7-1 Friday. That win put her at 997.

Gibbs has two home games scheduled this week (Northview Academy on Tuesday and Maryville on Friday), so Coach Mitchell is on track to be playing for the historic victory on Tuesday, April 4, at Carter.

It's time to migrate north: The birds are on the move' Virtual Program

Spring is here and our migratory birds are starting to fly home. Many birds migrate south for the winter to find food because they primarily eat insects or fruit. Over the next few weeks millions will be returning north, passing over our homes on their way to northern breeding grounds. They fly at night to avoid overheating and spend their days in our trees looking for food. Join the UT Arboretum Society via Zoom on Thursday, April 6 at 7 p.m. as Michelle Campanis, education coordinator at the University of Tennessee Arboretum, and naturalist Stephen Lyn Bales give us an overview of migratory birds in East Tennessee.

Here's a fun fact you will learn: did you know that if the Blackpole Warbler were burning gasoline instead of body fat it would be getting 720,000 miles per gallon!

The program is free, but registration is required to receive your Zoom link and the recording. Closed captions are available. Register at www.utarboretum-society.org Please contact Michelle at mcampani@utk.edu for any questions or registration issues.
