Grayson Subaru 'Shares the Love' with Ijams Nature Center

By Jamie Schnell Schnellj@knoxfocus.com

Thursday's Subaru Share the Love Event at the ljams Visitor Center featured a generous donation from Grayson Subaru, a longtime supporter of ljams. They presented a check for over $46,000, which will help fund Phase 2 of Ijams' property development. Previously, Grayson Subaru assisted in purchasing nearly 14 acres of land, known as the Grayson Subaru Preserve.

Phase 2 will focus on creating a cutting-edge nature playscape in the upland area adjacent to the current playscape, as well as expanding the swim area of Mead's Ouarry. This upland area will offer more opportunities for hill climbing and include serene spaces like "forest rooms" for visitors to enjoy. Subaru sales manager JC Marquardt told The Knoxville Focus, "Grayson is proud that they were able to do this and to be a part of it, and proud of the world that has been created here.

Juvenile center reorganization approved amid politics

By Mike Steely Senior Writer steelym@knoxfocus.com

The Knox County Commission spent several hours last week approving changes at the Richard L. Bean Juvenile Service Center. The 53-year-old facility has been mired in controversy in recent years that came to a climax recently when the director, Richard Bean, fired the place's only nurse and another employee over their complaints about conditions there.

Knox County Mayor Glenn Jacobs stepped in and reinstated the employees and called for Bean's retirement. Bean will leave in August, and the mayor proposed that the Knox County Sheriff's Office take over the management in January.

In the interim, the commission debated approving the mayor's proposal, which includes naming a five-member board and an interim director. Brian Bivens has been suggested by the mayor to fill that position in August and serve until the sheriff takes over.

Mayor Jacobs and District 2 Commissioner Courtney Durrett each sponsored a resolution on the juvenile center's management that saw lots of debate, especially regarding which four commissioners would serve on the new transition board for one year.

She said that over the year the organization has received about 26,000 calls or about 2,000 each month. She said the organization is stressing an "educate and assist" policy and told the Knox County Commission that 500 animals were identified and returned to their homes. She said the county and city have about 250,000 pet owners.

City voters to decide on sales tax increase in November

By Mike Steely Senior Writer steelym@knoxfocus.com

The Knoxville City Council voted 7-1 Tuesday evening to place a referendum for a <sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub> cent increase in local sales taxes on the November city election ballot. Five new council members will also be chosen in that election, but most of the focus is on whether or not city voters approve of the increase that will provide five years of funding for additional street paving, greenway and public facilities repairs, new sidewalks near schools and increasing affordable homes.

The possibility of Knox County also taking part in the decision loomed over the meeting. Knox County Mayor Glenn Jacobs had idea, but the Knox County Commission could vote to do so. If that happens and county voters vote "Yes," the city would lose about half of the expected $45 million to the county.

Only At-large Councilwoman Amelia Parker opposed the increase; District 5 Councilman Charles Thomas was absent from the meeting. Three public speakers endorsed the increase.

Most of the council members spoke in favor of the increase, including Andrew Roberto, who said the long-overlooked city projects are needed. He noted that if the county enters the referendum, the city's food sales tax, exempted from the proposed said he would not introduce the increase, goes away.

Parker called for a list of the projects that would be funded in the proposed Neighborhood Infrastructure Five-Year Investment Plan. She questioned what might happen if a new mayor or council opposes the increase. Law Director Charles Swanson replied that a current council cannot mandate what a future council does. Parker then suggested that the tax increase be part of the city charter.

In other action, the council approved a contract with River Sports Outfitters Inc. as the service provider at the Augusta Quarry in Fort Dickerson Park for $168,200 annually. The company will rent flotation equipment, provide free life jackets, and oversee the much-improved amenities at the quarry. Mayor Indya Kincannon said that Ben Apperson will oversee the quarry operations

The council also voted to increase the funding of ljams Nature Center for a new contract amount of $197,750.

Also approved were four funding grant requests from the Knoxville Police Department for deescalation training, violent crime prevention, recruitment and opioid policing.

Knoxville Community Media was given a new contract agreement for $ 300,000 due to the decrease in state and federal funds. Councilwoman Parker, who serves on that committee, said the public broadcast service was "saved from drowning to treading water."

On the city's consent agenda: standards were adopted for converting existing buildings into two-family dwellings, a $22,500 grant from Homeland Security was approved for the Knoxville-Knox County Emergency Management Agency, two properties were annexed into the city, and a $525,942 federal grant application was approved (with a city match of $27,680) for risk reduction programming and public education for the Knoxville Fire Department.

PAGE A2 The Knoxville Focus This Is Israel's War – Not Our War

From a distance

President Trump, to his credit, demanded a ceasefire between Israel and Iran. Both countries agreed to it. Then, the president became very angry with Israel because, as he said, "As soon as we made the deal, they came out and they dropped a load of bombs the likes of which I've never seen before."

But as I write this column, the ceasefire is still in effect. I hope it lasts. However, just two days before the ceasefire, we dropped ten 30,000-pound bunker bombs on Iran, a country that had not even shot one bullet at us.

Please, God, let this be the end of our involvement in the war between Israel and Iran.

and Israel First neocons led us into a very unnecessary war in Iraq that cost the lives of so many young Americans, and led to the blinding and maiming of thousands more. It was not worth their sacrifice.

Donald Trump was elected as president in 2016 primarily because of his opposition to the war in Iraq, and because he promised to put America First.

The overwhelming majority of Americans - both Democrats and Republicans - do not want this country stuck in another war in the Middle East.

This is not our war; it is Netanyahu's war. The very respected foreign policy expert and Columbia professor, Jeffrey Sachs, a Jew, has described Netanyahu as "one of the most violent and dangerous people in this world.'

Tom Friedman, the longtime New York Times columnist and also a Jew, wrote in his column of May 9 that "Netanyahu is not our friend."

This is Israel's war. It is killed Iran's top eight gen- weeks or months away not our war. Netanyahu erals and its nine leading from developing a nuclear nuclear scientists even before the U.S. dropped its bombs.

> Israel also claimed it had destroyed Iran's groundbased air defense capabilities and had achieved total air superiority even before we got involved.

If their claims are true, Israel was already winning this war. They started this war, let them finish it without us.

Israel supposedly had two main goals in invading Iran: To stop Iran's nuclear weapons program and to foster regime change there.

Well, all of our top intelligence officials in both Democratic and Republican administrations had certified for years that Iran was not building any nuclear weapons. Tulsi Gabbard, now our highest intelligence official, also certified this again in her congressional testimony on March 25.

Netanyahu was so eager to go to war against Iran he has cried wolf so many times, for 30 years, always Israel claimed it had falsely saying Iran was just bomb.

Netanyahu claimed many times that Iran was the main purveyor of terrorist violence around the world. Actually, it has been Israel that has spread violence throughout the Middle East.

The late Charley Reese, who in 1999 was voted as the most popular columnist by C-Span viewers, wrote in 2002: "The big pushers for war with Iraq are the usual suspects - Americans with a long record of pretending to speak about American interests, when in fact, they are pushing an Israeli agenda." Today, you can replace the word "Iraq" with the word "Iran."

As far as its goal of regime change is concerned, the very respected foreign policy analyst, John Mearsheimer, said you cannot achieve that goal with only an air campaign. Americans definitely do not want to see the boots of our troops on the ground in Iran.

Too many of our presidents and their top advisors have seemingly wanted to be new Winston Churchills. They seem to feel more important if they can lead us into another war.

Eisenhower, who spent his career in the military, was strong enough to resist this impulse in 1956 when Israel demanded that we support its war against Egypt.

Mitchell Bard wrote about this in The Times of Israel in 2014: "Eisenhower went on television to criticize Israel's failure to withdraw from Egypt and warned he would impose sanctions if it failed to comply. Eisenhower was prepared to cut off all economic aid, to lift the taxexempt status of the United Jewish Appeal, and to apply sanctions on Israel." What courage that was.

Today, almost every member of the U.S. Congress is afraid to criticize Israel's bombing, killing, and starving of many thousands of little children because of the Israel Lobby's power and ability to direct massive campaign contributions for them or against them.

President Trump said

on February 13 that he wanted to cut the defense budget in half. Now he is pushing a "Big Beautiful Bill" to increase defense spending by $150 billion, moving it to over one trillion dollars a year.

June 30, 2025

On May 13 in Riyadh, President Trump criticized neocons, nation builders, and interventionists. Then, unfortunately, he bowed to the wishes of warmonger neocons by approving the dropping of bombs on Iran.

And, finally, President Trump said in his Inaugural Address: "We will measure our success not only by little battles we win, but also by the wars that end, and perhaps MOST IMPOR-TANTLY, THE WARS WE NEVER GET INTO."

Candidate Trump reportedly accepted a $100 million campaign contribution from Miriam Adelson in return for a promise to support Israel in every way. Hopefully, he can resist this pressure and go down in history as an anti-war, peace president like Eisenhower.

Who to believe, the president or the national security experts, the intelligence community and the nuclear scientists? Regardless, the bottom line is that Iran must not have a nuclear weapon because the zealots running the country will use it on Israel. That threat is intolerable for any people, but especially one that has experienced the holocaust, the pogroms and all the purging and terrorism of the Jewish people throughout history. That said, this is Israel's war and is its responsibility not ours.

By Steve Hunley, Publisher publisher@knoxfocus.com

The City of Knoxville appears to have a spending problem. In order to spend even more, it must increase taxes. The last property tax hike was a whopping 40% increase. Now, Mayor Indya Kincannon is asking voters inside the city to increase the already hefty sales tax. The increase in the quite nearly 10% sales tax, one of the highest in the country, supposedly would be for adding "affordable housing," sidewalks, greenways and parks. Keep in mind that the first thing Kincannon did after hiking property taxes was to cut back services in the form of keeping police officers from coming to traffic accidents unless someone is injured. Hiring more police officers and restoring that vital service to city taxpayers might be worth more on the sales tax. Presently, the city administration seems to enjoy dedicating every patch of scrub as a "greenway."

The City of Knoxville does not operate a school system, health department, libraries, or services other than police and fire and residential garbage pickup. given day. The number of than those paying to pro-The city does, however, offer very generous defined pensions for its employees and finds any number of ways to throw away money. For instance, the city government proposes to spend $60 million of taxpayer dollars for a bridge that benefits the University of Tennessee. At any given time, there seems to be roughly a billion dollars' worth of development occurring at UT which is largely funded through tuition costs and appropriations from the state and federal government. The people living inside the City of Knoxville are also county, state and federal taxpayers, and the case for funding a pedestrian bridge across the river has never been adequately made. The city sought a federal grant and loaded down their grant proposal with language to indicate the bridge would be diverse, racially equitable and other such language so as to appeal to the regents of the Biden administration. Surprise! Kamala Harris did not win the presidential election and the bridge proposal was denied by the Trump administration, which doesn't much like woke bridge proposals. The city seems to be struggling to pay for the necessary repairs for the Gay Street bridge to be able to once again bear traffic. As of now, it, too, is a pedestrian bridge, albeit not by design.

Unfortunately, the city council seems less a legislative body than a rubber stamp for whatever the mayor decides to do on any leaders on the city council is exactly zero. The number of followers is precisely eight, coincidentally, the entire sum of the total membership minus one. The one would be Amelia Parker, a self-described Democratic Socialist, who dissents from the far, far left.

Like many other cities run by leftist Democrats and Democratic Socialists, the city government does its best to be woke and adopt a tax-and-spend philosophy that does little to improve the lives of the people paying the freight. There seems to be increasing pressure for politicians in cities to act as if they are Santa Claus and give away things. Zohran Mamdani is a young and proudly socialist candidate running for mayor of New York City, who, if possible, is proposing to run New York City straight into the ground. Mamdani proposes to refit New York City's school buildings with "renewable energy infrastructure," which would cost $3.27 billion over ten years. Mamdani wants to open and run city-owned grocery stores and provide free transportation for people.

Mamdani's proposals would dramatically increase the size of government and, of course, taxes - all in the name of "affordability." The question becomes affordable for who exactly? For a city, state or country to function properly, there must be a tax base to provide funding. When the recipients of government "freebies" becomes greater vide them, a big problem occurs. The roof becomes too heavy to support and collapses on the house. Yet the specialists, planners and wokesters never find a penny of fraud or waste, unless it is to fund law enforcement or the military. They all follow the wisdom of that old saying that the best tax is one that someone else pays while you derive the benefit. That statement is the core of their philosophy for everything they do propose. As housing costs continue to rise and the government's response is to raise taxes, folks are catching it from both ends. Raising property taxes increases both rent AND mortgages. Kincannon and the council raised property taxes 40% the last time and are back to raise the sales tax now because they can't manage the city government. When was the last time you heard a single member of the city council describe something other than law enforcement as a waste of taxpayer dollars? When was the last time you heard a member of the Knoxville City Council say we would like to do it but can't afford it and can't keep raising taxes? The last member I heard say that was Carlene Malone, and that has been a long time ago.

People have been leaving New York City in droves and should Zohran Mamdani be elected this November, even more people will leave and take their money with them. When the "haves" have departed, it leaves only the "have-nots" and council have all been for nobody to pay for the freebies, which are NOT free after all.

The City of Knoxville is finally having to face the music by having candidates for the council run inside the districts they are supposed to represent instead of running city-wide. That is a BIG improvement to have council members who actually represent the people of their district instead of the mayor. With Kincannon's proposed sales tax increase on the ballot this November, the people of Knoxville have good reason to come out and vote. It also gives candidates for the city council ample opportunity to state whether or not they favor the proposed sales tax increase. In fact, it is an opportunity for Knoxvillians to ask candidates running for city council to clearly state whether or not they would support continuing the tax-and-spend policy of the last twelve years. The people have a right to know where their elected representatives stand, and at some point, the city government can't keep increasing its costs while doing less and less, all while spending more and more. The City of Knoxville, under Madeline Rogero and Indya Kincannon, has adopted an attitude of continually spending more and more and accomplishing less and less. There has been no voice of reason on the city council, nor has there been any council member to speak on behalf of the people who pay the bills. The advocates on the those who soak up taxpaver dollars and pay little to keep the government running. Completely absent from the conversation are council people who urge economy or wish to eliminate waste. We need council members who will question the wisdom of paying $1.7 million for an alleged piece of art that looks like a melted mushroom. Should the City of Knoxville be in the art business in the first place when we have more pressing needs? Yes, there are a lot of people who believe it would have been better to spend the $1.7 million to help repair the Gay Street bridge to handle traffic issues than to erect the melted mushroom downtown. Unfortunately, none of them occupy a seat on the city council.

The people of Knoxville need to he heard and make your own viewpoint heard. Now that city council members must answer to the people they supposedly represent, it is long past time for the city's legislative body to consider some economies and spending within its means. Even the taxpayers do not have bottomless pockets. Knox County has not raised property taxes since 1999, while the City of Knoxville has raised them constantly.

There is a powerful argument waiting to be made to the people of Knoxville, and hopefully, the candidates running for city council this year will make it.

So, what happens if a witness breaks the rule and listens to testimony anyway? That's a big no-no. > Sometimes people confuse sequestration with a "sequestered jury," which is a totally different concept. That term refers to jurors being isolated-often in a hotel without outside contact-to keep them from being influenced by media or public opinion during a high-profile trial. While both use the word "sequester," they deal with very different situations.

The next time you hear a lawyer request sequestration, you'll know it's a standard part of keeping the trial fair. It's not dramatic or mysterious-it's just about making sure everyone tells their own truth.

Deputy District Attorney Mike Moyers told the meeting that the county has no power to regulate a utility district. Fox said the utility district board would go along with no fluoride being added if the commission asked it. Fox said that state Representative Elaine Davis plans to introduce legislation limiting fluoride.

Given Moyers' statement, at-large Commissioner Larsen Jay asked Fox to withdraw his ordinance and go to the utility district as a private citizen and customer.

Fox responded he wanted to proceed, adding that a position on the issue could affect support in the upcoming race for Knox County Mayor, where Jay is a candidate.

Jay called for the vote, and it failed 7-3, with Shane Jackson being absent. Fox, Russell and Lee voted "No."

Surprises

And who knows if perhaps you have come to the kingdom for a time such as this.

Esther 4:14

In the Myers-Briggs typology of personality, I am an ISTJ. These designations define me as slightly introverted, a careful observer who is logical and prefers to get his work done rather than delaying chores. Waiting until the last minute to produce a thousand-word essay is not my style.

Each week, the deadline for my column is Thursday, so after routine chores are done, I try to sit down at my desk on Tuesday - and for sure by Wednesday - and see what happens. I can identify with author Ray Bradbury, who said that he sits down at his desk, surveys his eclectic office and lets his imagination run wild to produce his stories. I'm an essayist so my stories do not arise from the imagination, but from researching the world of events and thoughts. And since I'm now retired from medicine, I am better able to manage my creative time. I sometimes make notes as I read, watch and think. Sometimes I use these notes, but often I don't because you never know when a bombing campaign in the Middle East may occur. Or you never know what may appear on your porch! We live in the UT Hospital area and, yes, that is a young black bear on my porch in the above picture. We've had deer, turkeys, foxes and coyotes stroll through the yard, but a bear sauntering just twenty feet away is a bit disconcerting. Last week I wrote of "Two represented by the celebratory parade of the U.S. Army's 250 years of service to the country and the No Kings hate-filled protest of President Trump. If the protesters knew any history, they'd realize we celebrate "no kings" every July 4th. (If you missed that essay, all of my columns are online in The Knoxville Focus archives.)

I write because I can. I write because it gives me (and others) a "voice" at The Knoxville Focus, which affords me a platform to express my thoughts. And I write because it gives me purpose and creative joy.

However, research and constructing an essay takes work. The creative joy actually comes from polishing the essay's prose. And when finished, the sense of accomplishment arrives when I hit the send button linked to The Focus publishing staff.

Last week, as an experiment, I gave the principal topics in the "Two Americas" essay to Grok, an online AI (artificial intelligence) platform, and asked it to construct an essay for comparison to my own. It took me about ten minutes to scan last week's essay, list the topics and send them to Grok. The AI spit out a pretty good essay in less than a minute.

Since Becky is my editress, thankfully proofing all my work, I asked her to read Grok's essay and offer critique. She liked the concluding paragraph, but found the rest of the essay lacking the "human touch" which comes from an "author's bias." She said Grok's essay read like a "sterile" newspaper article rather than a heartfelt opinion piece. My partner in life is obviously kind to her husband, but also sharp. "The Doctor is in" will not be replaced by "Grok is in" any time soon. The Fergusons still have job security!

Since the world was unaware of the bear on my porch, the big story last week was the destruction of Iran's nuclear weapons program. Of course, loathsome Democrats, like bartender AOC and swivel-head Jasmine Crockett, were enraged that President Trump didn't notify them of the secret mission. This would have endangered our pilots, planes and soldiers because the attack would have been leaked to the equally loathsome NYT, CNN and the media. Chuck Schumer was also upset because he will now have to eat the TACOs (Trump always chickens out) he's been calling Trump for weeks. What a bunch of Democrat losers. Maybe Schumer should be working the window at Taco Bell.

The coordinated attack elected as the Democratic on Iran's nuclear weapon facilities comprised seven stealth bombers, which flew halfway around the world to drop fourteen 30,000pound precision bombs on weapon factories. The bombers were supported by more than 100 other aircraft, while our submarines fired dozens of Tomahawk missiles at Iranian radar and surface-to-air missile sites. What an impressive, coordinated, courageous mission. And the B-2 bombers are technologically amazing and look almost otherworldly.

I was proud to be an American whose armed forces were able to remove the terrorist Iranian regime's nuclear threats. It may seem like a technicality, but Secretary Marco Rubio said, "We are not at war with Iran; we are targeting Iran's nuclear weapons program." But the media and Democrats' vile hatred of President Trump causes them to hate everything he does, even making the world safer by eliminating Iran's ability to construct a nuclear weapon. These Democrat losers are anti-MAGA, anti-American, anti-military, anti-ICE and anti-semitic. Who knows what surprises await us tomorrow or next week? A radical Democrat socialist was just nominee for mayor of New York City, the epicenter of American capitalism. I have no sympathy for the liberal elites of Gotham whose "suicide empathy" vote will seal their own doom.

Despite what the media gutter snipes say, Trump was right again. And no, Mr. President, I'm not tired of winning. Patriots support you in the MAGA struggle. Democrats and their media stooges have become objects of ridicule. Inflation is down, real income is up. We are moving toward energy independence again. Illegal criminals are being deported. The judicial resistance movement will continue to fail, and hopefully, it'll lead to the impeachment of rogue activist judges. And finally, tyrants around the world will forever think twice after the Saturday attack.

The prophet Elisha was trained for 10 years before his ministry began. And it has been 10 years since President Trump "came down the elevator." I believe Trump was called for a time such as this.

I am thankful that Trump 2.0 is our president and truly the leader of the free world.

Forgotten African-American Cemetery rests in Solway

One of the interesting graves in the cemetery is that of Dr. Charles A. McCamey, son of William and Sarah Mc-Camey. William may have been a former slave. The family played an important part in the history of Knox County.

The intention of this article is not political. I assure you that it does not lean toward Republican rhetoric or Democratic declarations.

There is no attempt to sway you, the reader, about the geopolitical chaos we see across the world today. Instead, I want to express a deeper truth that I encountered through a text message that went viral to the president of the United States from former governor and current U.S. Ambassador to Israel, Mike Huckabee.

In his message to President Trump regarding the current situation in the Middle East, Ambassador Huckabee said, "You have solemn reminder that true

As the conflict between Israel and Iran intensified, Huckabee urged the president to listen not to the voices of men but to hear the voice of God. Regardless of our personal opinions about current global affairs, we can agree on one thing: amidst political calculations and military strategies, Huckabee's words offer a

In a world filled with noise-loud headlines, buzzing social media, and competing opinions-it's becoming increasingly difficult to hear the one voice that truly matters: the voice of God. No matter the chaos or conflict we may encounter in our lives, we need to remember that clarity comes not from louder voices but from a deeper connection to the still, small whisper of the Divine. Hearing God is not just for the powerful or prophetic; it's a spiritual discipline accessible to every believer. In the midst of life's noise, the real question is not whether God can speak, but whether we can hear Him when He does.

God is not unique to our generation. In 1 Kings 19, the prophet Elijah found himself in a dark and desperate place. Chaos surrounded him, and he felt utterly alone. He had just called down fire from heaven, but now he was fleeing for his life-discouraged, exhausted, and emotionally drained. He took refuge in a cave on Mount Horeb, hoping to hear from God. When God did speak, it was not in the way Elijah expected. Elijah anticipated that God would communicate through powerful natural elements like wind, an earthquake, or a fire. To his astonishment, God did not speak through these dramatic displays, but rather through a whisper. It was not in the storm that Hearing noise is nothing Elijah recognized God's lt's understand that God still speaks, often in ways we least expect. In our fastpaced culture, everything is designed to grab our attention and drown out the stillness. However, if we want to hear the voice of God, we must learn the discipline of quieting the external noise and tuning in to the inner stillness where we can truly hear Him. Our ability to hear God is not a luxury; it's a necessity.

I believe that Huckabee's encouragement to the president to seek God's voice is not just political wisdom-it's a spiritual urgency. My prayer is that the president of the United States takes this advice from the U.S. Ambassador to Israel seriously. The

We all face critical and important to consequential choices in our lives. Therefore, I encourage you to set aside time to be with God. Silence is not emptyit's sacred. Fill your mind with scripture, as it is the primary way God communicates with His people. Listen for His voice to whisper promises and provide direction, and be willing to obey what He has revealed to you.

Seek counsel as well; godly voices in our lives often serve as instruments of God's direction. In the days ahead, whether for our families, our churches, our nation, or our souls, we must ask ourselves: Am I listening to the loudest voices or to the One voice that is by far the most important?

> I suspect that another reason exists for the board's changing merit system. More than one parent has pitched a fit when their children lost out to a classmate in the academic competition. The last thing board members want is a meeting room full of upset parents. So, the politician sides come out, and they begin to contort an accepted practice so that something new will soothe sore parents.

Parents say they want schools that provide quality education. If that is the case, then they should demand that the Knox County School Board retain the valedictorian/salutatorian system. Tell the board that following national trends is not necessarily the right thing to do. At the same time, I doubt that keeping things the same will lead to hundreds of students swapping schools to find an easier place to become the top student. By Ray Hill rayhill865@gmail.com

Beckham was the first U.S. senator to be popularly elected by the people of Kentucky. Beckham was the leader of a powerful wing of the Bluegrass State's Democratic Party and was an imposing figure in its politics for decades.

J. C. W. Beckham was the scion of a well-known family that had been prominent in Kentucky's politics for years. His mother's father, Charles Wickliffe, had been governor of Kentucky and served very briefly as postmaster general under President John Tyler. If the young J. C. W. Beckham had aristocratic roots, the family did not have family money to go with the pedigree, as he was forced to drop out of school in order to support his mother, who had been widowed. A young man of ability and determination, within a relatively short time and before he was twenty years old, J. W. C. Beckham was a school principal. At the same time he was working, Beckham was attending the University of Kentucky and studying the law. Beckham earned a degree and began practicing law in Bardstown, Kentucky.

Beckham had earned his law degree in 1893, and as the following year was an election year, the young man took his first plunge into politics by runremarkable to note that the 23-year-old Beckham was unopposed. Apparently, Beckham was a natural-born politician as he rose through the ranks of the House and served as speaker in 1898. Kentucky has held its gubernatorial elections in the off-year and still William Goebel does. was the Democratic nominee for governor in 1899 and selected Beckham as his running mate. J. W. C. Beckham was not quite 30 years old when Goebel chose him to run for lieutenant governor. The gubernatorial race was hard fought and William Goebel lost to Republican candidate William S. Taylor, but the Democrats immediately challenged the results of the election. As expected, with the Democrats controlling both houses of Kentucky's state legislature, it appeared they would overturn the verdict of the voters. Ironically, Goebel had been the author of an election law which created a three-man board of elections, all of whom were Democrats and friendly to the Democratic nominee. The Kentucky Board of Elections rendered a 2-1 decision saying the ballots under dispute in the 1899 election should be counted. a position diametrically opposed to that of virtually

> The legislature was still arguing on January 30, 1900, when William Goebel was shot as he was walking into the Capitol Building. No one seems to know how many shots were fired; some estimate five or six, but one struck Goebel in the chest, mortally wounding him. The day after being shot, William Goebel took the oath of office as governor of Kentucky. Surrounded by no less than 18 doctors, Governor Goebel managed to sign only a single proclamation and died on February 3, 1900. J. C. W. Beckham assumed the office of governor following Goebel's death.

> To quell the chaos resulting from the controversy and the assassination of William Goebel, a special election was called to determine who would be the governor. J. C. W. Beckham beat the GOP candidate in the special election and by that time had turned 30, which was the required constitution.

The ruling from the court affirmed Beckham's right to be a candidate again, stating he had not served a full term in office after succeeding Goebel and was therefore eligible to run. Beckham was elected to a full term as governor in his own right by the people of Kentucky. Consolidating his power as chief executive, J. C. W. Beckham stunned the political class when he sought to move the primaries for governor and the United States Senate well before the mandated dates. In the instance of the governorship, Beckham wanted the primary moved up a year and the senatorial election by two full years. It was a naked move to grab the senatorial nomination for himself while he still sat in the governor's chair. Using the levers of power and patronage adroitly, Beckham also backed Samuel W. Hager for the gubernatorial nomination. With the full backing of the Beckham administration, Hager won. Governor Beckham also secured the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate for himself through a preferential primary held two years before the 1908 election.

Official state portrait of Governor J. C. W. Beckham.

Kentucky Republicans put up former Governor William O. Bradley for the Senate seat, but Beckham's heavyhanded tactics had alienated just enough fellow Democrats to make his election to the United States Senate impossible. Senators of the United States were still elected by state legislatures and were not legally bound by the results of Kentucky's preferential primary. Sixtynine votes were needed to win the Senate seat, and Governor Beckham peaked at 66. The balloting lasted weeks, and the governor minimum age by the state could not get the 69 votes needed and William O. By state law, Kentucky's Bradley was close behind draw and let the party rally around another nominee. but he refused. Beckham's stubbornness collapsed his candidacy on the 29th ballot when four Democratic legislators crossed over party lines to vote for former Governor William O. Bradley. Kentucky's state legislature, with Democrats in the majority, had elected a Republican to the United States Senate. Defeated for the United States Senate, J. C. W. Beckham resumed his law practice and waited for another opportunity. That opportunity came six years later. The passage of the Seventeenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States removed the power of state legislatures to elect members of the U.S. Senate and called for direct election by the people. Kentuckians would go to the polls for the first time in 1914 and elect their own senator. The former governor was hardly the only Democrat hankering to go to the United States Senate. Congressman Augustus O. Stanley, a 12-year veteran of the House of Representatives and a vocal opponent of prohibition, entered the primary, as did Governor James McCreary. Beckham won the Democratic nomination and the general election, governor, GOP nominee August Willson.

During the senatorial campaign, Beckham had pledged to support another Wilson, President Woodrow Wilson. Beckham went to Washington and kept his word, remaining a firm supporter of the president and Wilson's administration. It was during Beckham's service in the Senate that the Eighteenth Amendment was added to the Constitution, making the sale of alcohol illegal in the United States. The adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment destroyed the various distilling and brewery business located in the those who preferred it to Tennessee whisky, hard as that is to imagine. To the delight of fellow prohibitionists, women's temperance leagues and many churchgoers, saloons closed their doors and boarded up their windows. Beckham Senator took a dim view of the Nineteenth Amendment to the Constitution, giving women the right to vote. The Kentuckian took the position that politics was too vulgar a thing for the womenfolk to participate in; to the contrary, it would be a travesty to expose women to the sordid doings of government and politics. Senator Beckham voted against the Nineteenth Amendment twice. It passed despite Beckham's opposition and was ratified by the states. Beckham had to face the voters again in 1920, and there were a goodly number of women, both Democrats and Republicans, who were not at all pleased that their senator had voted to deny them the right to vote. So, too, were the "wets" in Kentucky angry with the senator for his support of prohibition; Beckham lost the votes of those whose businesses had been shuttered or lost, as well as many of those who enjoyed a cold beer now and then. Another factor defeating another former in the election was the American people having tired of Woodrow Wilson's stubborn insistence that America join the League of Nations. The president, a bitter invalid locked inside the White House, had lost considerable popularity with the American people and had been rebuffed when he had called for the election of a Democratic Congress in the 1918 elections. Democratic presidential nominee James M. Cox pledged to bring the United States into the League of Nations while GOP nominee Warren G. Harding promised a return to "normalcy." Harding won in a landslide Beckham in the Democratic and carried the Bluegrass State. Senator Beckham ised that if Kentucky Ernest, a 62-year-old attorney who practiced law in Cincinnati, Ohio, and lived in Covington, Kentucky. Beckham sought to return to public office by running for governor once again in 1927. Democrats had lost statewide elections in 1920 and 1924, but the party had recouped Beckham's seat in the Senate when Alben Barkley had defeated Senator Ernst. Beckham's comeback campaign was significantly aided by the support he received from his friend Robert Bingham, who had purchased the Louisville Courier-Journal. Once again, Beckham faced yet another large obstacle in his political path through the opposition generated by the Jockey Club, a powerful combine of special interests who were hellbent on making parimutuel betting legal in Kentucky. The Jockey Club supported Beckham's opponent in the primary unsuccessfully, then backed Republican nominee Flem Sampson in the general election. Governor William J. Fields, who had not supported Democratic U.S. Senator A. O. Stanley for reelection in 1924, once again bolted his party and refused to help Beckham against the Republicans. While the Democratic ticket swept every statewide race, J. C.

W. Beckham lost the governorship to Flem Sampson.

Resuming his lucrative law practice, Beckham remained a power inside Kentucky's Democratic Party, and every so often, the idea of trying to return to public office came to mind. Many political observers felt sure Beckham would run for governor in 1935, but the former senator was suffering from depression following the loss of a son. Beckham remained quite relevant to the politics of the time, offering his support to A. B. "Happy" Chandler, who was elected governor in 1935. Governor Chandler appointed the former senator to Kentucky's Public Service Commission, but Beckham had a bigger goal in mind. J. C. W. Beckham was looking toward Senator Marvel M. Logan's seat in the U.S. Senate.

The 67-year-old former senator entered the Democratic primary, but the senatorial campaign became a chaotic affair when Congressman John Y. Brown announced his own candidacy for Logan's seat. Brown spent much of the campaign denouncing Governor Chandler as an "ingrate," supposedly because the chief executive had earlier promised to support his senatorial candidacy if the congressman backed "Happy" for the governorship. Brown demanded that the governor meet him in a debate. Instead, Governor Chandler took to the stump to defend himself and hotly replied that John Y. Brown was the ingrate and ticked off every favor he had done for the congressman.

Congressman John Y. Brown was angry because Governor A. B. Chandler was openly backing J. C. W. primary. Chandler promwe will fulfill the destinies of Kentucky." Incumbent Marvel Logan merely campaigned hard and tried to wrap the mantle of President Roosevelt and the New Deal around himself as tightly as possible. That was enough for Senator Logan to eke out the narrowest of victories. Logan won 181,311 votes to 178,926 for Beckham, a difference of 2,385 ballots. John Y. Brown may well have kept Beckham from winning by siphoning off more than 85,000 votes. John C. W. Beckham suffered a stroke in August 1939 that partially paralyzed him and he never recovered. The 71-year-old former governor and senator died at his home on January 9, 1940. © 2025 Ray Hill

Seymour girls lacrosse team has magical 2025, makes state championship match

By Ken Lay

When high school girls lacrosse was a club sport, the Seymour Lady Eagles rose to prominence. Now that the Tennessee Secondary Schools Athletic Association is sanctioning the sport, not much has changed --at least in Seymour.

The Lady Eagles had another magical campaign in 2025 as they reached the Class A State Championship game with a relatively young team. Seymour lost the state title game, 13-12, to Page High School.

"We had some things go against us in that game that we couldn't control," Lady Eagles' coach Patrick Doyle said. "But it was a learning experience and these girls will be back. We're losing a few people but this team will be back."

The sophomores began taking leadership roles last season and they've emerged as the undisputed team leaders during the summer.

"My Class of 2027 is phenomenal," said Doyle, who guided the Lady Eagles to 14 wins this past spring. "When things weren't going well, it was the '27s that helped us pull things together.

"I have a few (rising seniors) but the team leaders are the '27s. Those girls are the best we've had since the 2018 class. The 2025 boys high school soccer season was a historic one for Knox County teams.

Grace Christian Academy made its first-ever trip to the Division II-A state semifinals and came home with a state championship plaque. Hardin Valley Academy won its second Class 3A state championship. Fulton made the Class 2A state tournament field for the first time in program history.

Bearden made another trip to Spring Fling. The Bulldogs, however, were eliminated by the Hawks in the guarterfinals. South-Doyle, which won the Class 2A state title in 2024, was the runner-up in Murfreesboro in 2025.

The Knoxville Focus takes one last look at the recently completed campaign and honors the accomplishments of some of the top players and coaches on its all-county team.

Co-Coach of the Year: Ray Dover, Hardin Valley Academy: Under Dover's direction, the Hawks won their second state championship in school history, and their first since 2011. Hardin Valley was also the Region 2-3A champion.

The Hawks won all three of their state tournament matches in thrilling fashion as they defeated district rival Bearden (3-2) in the opening round before edging Hendersonville (1-0) and Bartlett (4-3). They also defeated Bearden to win the region title.

Co-Coach of the Year: Isaac Brooks, Grace Christian Academy: Brooks guided the Rams to a state championship in their first trip to Spring Fling in Murfreesboro. Grace went 17-1, suffering its only loss of the 2025 campaign to Chattanooga Christian School. The Rams won 15 consecutive matches on their way to earning a state championship plaque. They defeated Webb School of Bell Buckle in the state title match.

Co-Coach of the Year: Austin Clow, Fulton High School: Clow guided the Falcons to the Class 2A state tournament for the first time in school history.
